Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

House On The Move

The Summer The Coast Guard Station Tried To Sail To Europe

By Dan Rattiner

After the Second World War ended, Carl Darenberg Jr. got a job taking yachts back and forth between Montauk and Florida. The pay was good, he was out in the sun all day, and of course the appointments on the yachts were pretty much luxurious. But after a year or two of this, he kind of got tired of it. He met a girl, one of the Tumas of Montauk, an old long standing family of that town and she told him if he wanted to settle down, he would have to find a job that kept him in

Carl got a job working for the Davis Brothers house movers in Patchogue. House moving on Eastern Long Island was a big business back then. It still is. Summer homes are moved back from the beach, old farmhouses are moved from one town to another. Sometimes you see them on the highways, jacked up on pilings supported by axles and rubber tires being towed by a giant truck, workmen in the front and other workmen in cars in the back waving red flags to keep the traffic alert to the situation. They only go about three or four miles an hour to make sure that everything is O.K.

Commissions were offered to the workmen at Davis Brothers, if they could find a house that needed moving or arrange for a contract. And so it was that young Carl, who was about twentyfour at the time, became involved in what is possibly the largest house moving project of all time on the Eastern End of Long Island. This was the moving of the United States Coast Guard Station from the beach at Napeague to Star Island in Montauk. The Coast Guard station is three stories tall with dormers up on the roof for attic apartments and it measures sixty feet long and thirty-five feet wide. An all white building built The Daisy D, could tow it across the still waters in a Georgian manner around the turn of the century, it presented a formidable challenge. Some house moving companies had proposed cutting it up into four pieces and then towing them down the Montauk Highway to West Lake Drive in Montauk and out to Star Island Causeway to where it needed to go, but the expense would be so great > that Coast Guard officials upon hearing the price figured it would be cheaper just to tear the building down and have a new one built on Star Island. They were consolidating after all, since World War Two had ended, and they needed to cut back and

> But then they heard young Carl Darenburg's proposal. Darrenburg told the Coast Guard he could do the job without having to cut the building up at all and without having to take it on the Montauk Highway or any highway for that matter. The cost would be less than half of doing it the conventional way. He said that his company, Davis Brothers, could jack the entire building up - it weighed about two hundred tons - and tow it due north from its position on the dunes of the Atlantic Ocean for less than a half a mile until it arrived at the beach of Napeague Harbor. There it could be slid onto a barge, moored to the beach, at which point Carl, driving his own personal fishing boat, of the harbor, through the narrow inlet, out into Gardiner's Bay, then turn due east and tow it the ten miles to the entrance of Montauk Harbor.

It would take about three hours for his boat to do this at a very careful three and a half knots. He would bring it into the harbor and beach it on the shore of Star Island inside of Lake Montauk.

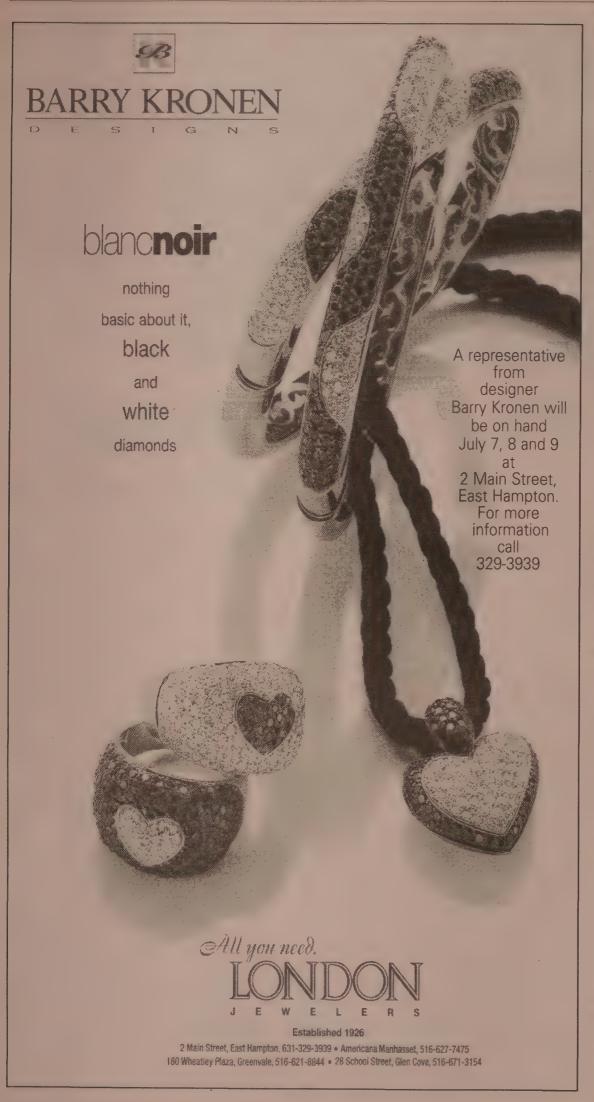

> Darenberg described the work he had done in the Navy during the war and all of the ships that he had towed without incident back and forth between Florida and Montauk on the inland waterway and the officials of the Coast Guard said, well he works for Davis Brothers House Movers and they must know what they are doing, and they approved it.

Back at Davis Brothers, Carl spoke to the management there, explained his plan, said the Coast Guard was enthusiastic about it and the managers of the Davis Brothers House Movers said, well if the United States Coast Guard thinks it's a good idea, then it probably is.

A crew from Davis Brothers arrived at the Coast Guard building in Napeague at the beginning of May in 1952. They brought winches and steam shovels and bulldozers, compressed air lifting jacks, gas driven generators and about a hundred railroad ties covered in black grease. The month of May was chosen for the attempt because the winter storms and northeasters are over and the weather tends to be fairly mild and it is three months before the hurricane season.

On May 15, with considerable fanfare, the Coast Guard station was lifted onto its axle with the shiny oversized rubber tires and towed across the

The hottest ticket in Southampton for the evening of July 22 is the small dinner being given by Barbaralee Diamonstein and Carl Spielvogel for the First Lady Hillary Clinton at their fabulous new residence on Lake Agawam. Actually, anyone who attends gets a "Three for" - 1) an opportunity to talk with the democratic Senatorial candidate; 2) in an intimate setting of the Spielvogel's dramatic new Gin Lane house, and 3) a chance to feast on a dinner to be cooked my master chef Daniel Bouled himself, the celebrated owner-chef of Daniel in Manhattan. The tab is $6,200 per person (to match all of the sixty-two counties in New York State, each of which has been visited by Hillary) and is roughly the cost of a gourmet dinner at Restaurant Daniel! For information call the Hillary 2000 Headquarters, 212-239-2000.

New Dog In Town

Moo Barks, Leaps, Pants, Licks, Eats, Sleeps, Snaps And Gambols

By Dan Rattiner

All the dogs that I've ever owned have been mutts, most of them gotten at the Animal Rescue Fund in East Hampton, and generally of the same design. They are very furry with hair over their eyes, they are large and playful and with the ability to express emotions on their faces. I've always favored mutts because I'm told that they're a lot less cranky and stubborn than pure bred. They also tend to live longer, there's the matter of providing an orphan dog a home and, of course, there's the matter of price: mutts are cheap.

Then this past Christmas there came into my life a wheaten terrier puppy. He was three months old, paper trained but not house broken, thoughtful and playful as young puppies are, and a sort of compact version of what I was used to. He would grow to be no more than thirty or thirty-five pounds and on his arrival he appeared to be a sort of clean slate, hadn't a clue about what was going on other than within a few feet of him. He was going to be work for myself and for Cathie and the rest of the family and though I was unfamiliar with the breed, the word terrier kind of bothered me. I've had mutts before that had a little terrier in them and for one of them, we had to keep an oar from the rowboat by the piano in the living room. This was for when you wanted him to come with you, but he didn't want to go, and he would scramble under the piano and stay there, growling at anyone that tried to get him out. The oar was the only answer.

I have always tried to get dogs that would come when you call them, even if you were angry with them. Big sheep dog types reflectively come when you call them; there's no argument. With terriers, you call them, they think about it. What's in it for them? Is this a good time for them to be going where you want them to? Are they busy doing something else that would be more fun? You either have to chase them around or wait until they're ready.

How he evaluates you in order to check your mood can seem a little spooky at first.

This wheaten puppy arrived with papers – not only the kind you pee on – two days before Christmas, on the night of the biggest moon of the century. I'm sure you remember that interesting astronomic phenomena. Night was almost like day that evening and so I decided having looked at his papers and seeing the long names of his father and mother, that this puppy would be called "Sportsman's Big Moon – The Bullet Dog." Sportsman's was the name of the breeder up in Wading River where this wheaten terrier puppy had come from; Bullet Dog was the temporary name we had given the dog having noticed his tendency to run rocketlike around the house, his soft padded feet taking him around silently as he dissipated all his energy.

We registered him with the American Kennel Club with this name; we call him Moo for short. As in cow.

I read a book on wheaten terriers, they've only recently been designated a breed (as in within the last century) and they come from Ireland where for hundreds of years they have been farm dogs. They are eager, playful and bright and they have the uncanny ability to evaluate how the people they live with feel.

You may have read that certain dogs are used in hospices to bring joy to the bedridden; the dog of choice is a Wheaten terrier. If he sees that you are sad, he comes over and licks you and nuzzles you and purrs; if you're happy he can sand, across the Montauk Highway, from south to north the telephone and lighting company wires had to be cut for about fifteen minutes. Then across the Long Island Railroad tracks, down the embankment to the beach, where a giant coal barge awaited. Carl and the two members of his crew had taken their fishing boat into Manhattan to lease this barge and had towed it back out into Long Island Sound to beach it at Napeague Harbor beach.

Trucks from Davis Brothers now pulled the coast guard station as close as they could to the barge then got to the other side and pushed it the rest of the way until it was completely on the barge.

They secured it. Strong steel cables were attached from the barge to Darenberg's ship the Molly B and then the tow began. It was something that Darenberg, his crew and the rest of the Davis Brothers people would not soon forget.

It was 11:30 in the morning when the pull began. The barge left the beach easily enough, and there were no problems crossing Napeague Harbor which is flat as glass, even in the worst weather. There wasn't even a cloud in the sky as they towed the Coast Guard station through the inlet through the harbor out into Gardiners Bay, and only a slight breeze blew as they changed course and headed due east for the ten-mile tow to Montauk Harbor. They should be there in three hours.

Things went along just fine for the first hour. The boat, with its powerful V8 engine, would surge forward until the lines grew tight and then howl and strain as they went taut between the tremendous weight of the barge and house. The momentum of the house and barge would carry it along for a while, the lines would go slack and then the ship would surge forward again and then the whole thing would be repeated. It really was quite a heavy load, about two hundred tons for this forty-five foot ship to be pulling, but they were doing it. The men broke out sandwiches and soda. They had lunch.

At the beginning of the second hour however, things began to change. A fresh wind sprang up in the west, making the seas slightly choppy. It also made the job easier however, because while the boat was pulling on one side, the wind was pushing on the other.

The sounds of struggle made by the V8 subsided somewhat. Carl, manning the wheel was pleased. But then, off on the horizon, the men saw something that made their blood run cold. There off in the distance, were storm clouds and under them, flashes of lightning. There was a storm coming.

"I think I'll have to move this along," Darenberg said to his two mates.

He pushed forward on the accellerator handle and the  $Molly\ B$  increased its speed from five knots to six and then seven. Oddly however, the  $Molly\ B$  did not quickly come to the point where the steel cables got pulled tight. It seemed to take some time. In fact, when the pull on the cables made the engine scream, Darenberg looked down to see that he was doing eight and a half to nine knots. The barge behind him he thought was doing eight and a half to nine knot and so the house was doing eight and half to nine knots.

He held up a finger to feel the wind. It had sprung up quite a bit at this point and he knew this was trouble. The next half-hour, Carl was to say later, were among the most frightening in his life. Suddenly the wind was blowing hard and white caps were forming. The steel cables went slack, he increased his speed. Eleven knots, then twelve knots and there was no tug on the cables. He went further. At fifteen knots the engines screamed again as it felt the cables tighten.

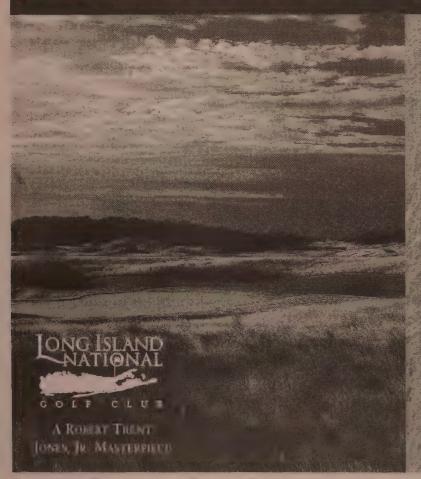

"What the hell is going on?" One of the mates yelled up from down below. The cables had gone slack again.

"It's God damn gaining on us," Darenberg said. Every ship captain knows the top speed of his ship. The Molly B was a heavy wooden ship and with a V8 Ford engine going full out, Darenberg knew he could get it up to twenty-one or twenty-two knots and in this rough sea – it was getting rougher by the minute – that would be all he was going to get.

At eighteen knots the cables tightened again, but it was just for a minute. Darenberg was able to get them tight only one more time and it was at the top speed of his ship, at twenty-two knots. After that, as the cable slackened, he knew he was in terrible trouble. The storm winds were blowing at thirty knots now, the skies were darkening and the lightning bolts were coming closer and closer and every minute in a full speed run around in circles in joy. He has the ability, when overcome with joy, to leap straight up about three feet

He tried this yesterday when I came home after I had been gone all day and he bumped his head on the underside of the kitchen table, which fortunately had no serious effect. He kept leaping about and bounding around and joyfully wagging the little stub of a tail he has. You'd have thought that during the day they announced my name as the winner of the Nobel Prize and this was the first chance he would have had to see me afterward.

How he evaluates you in order to check your mood can seem a little spooky at first. Basically he comes to about three feet away from you, faces you, and then sits down. In this seated position with his head held high, he doesn't move for about ten or fifteen seconds. Instead, but stares directly at you. I've never seen a dog do this before and until you get used to it, it can make you wonder what the hell is going on.

Moo learned about housebreaking from the other dog we have in the house, which is a one hundred forty-pound Great Dane. The Dane befriended Moo almost instantly and she showed him where the sliding door was and how to scratch at it to get somebody's attention to go out into the yard. The Dane can also, because of her great size and strength, put her nose between the handle and the door frame and push the slider open far enough so she can get herself out and of course Moo too. And so, Moo for a while became sort of dependent upon her.

Along the wall, about six feet from the slider however, is a small dog door, one of these things that has a wooden panel that can swing either in or out, depending which way a dog noses it. It hasn't been used for years and after Moo settled in and seemed to learn who was who in the house. we decided to show Moo how the dog door worked.

It happened one evening when we watched a program on the Discovery Channel about the sense of smell that dogs have. Cathie got a piece of cheddar cheese and went out the slider, then walked over to the dog door - both the dog door and the slider lead out to a deck - and she kneeled down and she held out a piece of cheese and began calling Moo by his name. Curious, he trotted over but stopped in the kitchen at the door. Cathie lifted up the little dog door so he could see the cheese in her hand outside on the deck and then she let it slide closed. Moo nosed it back open. Then he stuck his head out and when he did, Cathie grabbed him by the collar and pulled him all the way out. Then she gave him the cheese, got another piece of cheese, went back into the kitchen and did the same thing the other way.

Moo got this almost instantly. Immediately after getting this second piece of cheese, he ran out through the dog door then ran back into the kitchen through the dog door. His tailed wagged furiously, he was so happy. Then living up to his name, he tore around the living room sofa in great circles, periodically going off on a tangent and back into the kitchen and through the dog door and out onto the deck, turning around and roaring back inside again. He did this for about five or six minutes straight. Later, when we went to bed, we could hear him downstairs roaring onto the deck and then roaring back into the kitchen with his new discovery and up in bed we could hardly contain ourselves, it was so funny.

For the first few weeks, Moo slept in the big kingsize bed we have along with me, Cathie and the Dane. After the month was up though, after he got big enough to run up and down the steps to the second floor on his own, he took to sleeping downstairs in the living room, where from that central position, he could monitor all the noises that were made in the house during the night: the oil burner going on and off, cars going by on the street, people snoring. For awhile, if anything out of the ordinary would happen, he would start barking, making everybody aware of the situation, regardless of the time of night.

Cathie decided he was really deep down a guard dog and with the addition of the back yard, which he was now free to go in and out to, he had quite a big responsibility. She also decided that considering that how he would sometimes sit and stare at you, almost at attention, not moving a muscle, that he was sort of a soldier. Moo would go downstairs and Cathie would say, "Our little soldier is back on the job," and I thought she was right about that too.

Also, for that first month, the big Dane took a motherly interest in Moo. Besides teaching him the ropes about going to the bathroom, she kept the cats away from his food - we have four cats in the house - and on occasion I saw her carrying Moo around by the fur on the back of his neck.

The Rocker Adventure

John Rocker's Return To Shea Stadium Is Of Epic Proportions

By Dan Rattiner

One of the biggest events on television last week was John Rocker's return to New York City. Everyone was talking about it. Rocker is that pitcher from the Atlanta Braves who said in the off season - following a tense playoff series against the Mets last October - that New Yorkers were a bunch of dumb immigrants and losers. He said that you could go on the No. 7 subway train from Manhattan to Queens and be sitting across from two men holding hands or a twenty year old girl on welfare with four babies or a bunch of immigrants carrying weapons. This season, when he threatened the reporter who wrote his remarks up in Sports Illustrated he got sent down to the minor leagues where many believed he would never be heard from again. At the time however, his manager, Bobby Cox, said Rocker was sent down to the minors because his pitching had become erratic. Maybe the stress of the controversey had something to do with it, he didn't know, but they weren't going to be needing him at that particular time.

Personally, I don't follow baseball that closely, so I was surprised to hear that John Rocker, pitching for the Atlanta Braves was scheduled to out of hand. appear at Shea Stadium June 30-July 2 and be available for a four game series. To accommodate Mr. Rocker, the powers-that-be at Shea were building a roof over the left field visitors bullpen. Rocker is a good relief pitcher when he has his brain in order. All the relief pitchers sit in the bullpen, open to the sky. Rocker could be pelted > with anything from water bombs to oranges to bowling balls.

When the camera zoomed in to see Rocker during this run, he seemed a different person. There was fear on his face.

Three days before the first game, the New York media began to have a field day with the story. "Off His Rocker," was one headline. "The Boorish Brave Returns," was another. There were people ready to curse and scream, boo him and throw things on the field. There was no question things could get out of hand. In fact, it could get way

On that day, Rocker announced that in order to get out to Shea Stadium in Queens he would ride the No. 7 train. I began to imagine the Roman Coliseum with John Rocker running the gauntlet and a Caesar standing and giving the thumbs up or the thumbs down.

Still, there were calmer voices to be heard. Two days before the first game, full page ads, paid for by corporate advertisers, began to appear in the dailies, one in The New York Times and another in the New York Daily News. 'Show Compassion to a Troubled Soul," said the ad in the Daily News, paid for by Modell's Sporting Goods.

"Due to Mr. Rocker's ignorant view of New York City, the eyes of the world will be observing the city's initial reception to our angry 'prodigal son.' In the spirit of what makes New York great, we ask all New Yorkers to refrain from hostile actions and open our hearts to John. New Yorkers have always come to the aid of individuals in need and we know this time will be no exception. If you happen to come across John Rocker on the No. 7 on subway train offer your sympathy and support. Prove to John Rocker and to the world that New Yorkers are compassionate and generous to all."

Ha. Manager Bobby Cox was asked if some public relations man, or the Braves themsevles, had advised Rocker to take the No. 7 train and he said he was as surprised as anybody to hear about it and that it was Rocker's own idea.

Needless to say last Thursday not only was Shea Stadium sold out, but a record number of people in the metropolitan area including at my house, had their television sets turned on Fox Sports where the Atlanta-Mets game would be broadcast. Rocker's teammates arrived at Shea for a pregame practice in a team bus, but John Rocker was not on it.

In fact, word went out, he wasn't even going to be taking the subway train. He'd changed his mind about that. He did arrive somewhat later, during batting practice, in a police van, surrounded by a bevy of New York City squad cars.

Just prior to the game he met with members of the press and once again publically apologized for the things he had said. Then, when it was Atlanta's turn to take the field for the first time, he went out onto the field, into the bullpen, and sat under the temporary roof to watch the proceedings.

In many ways, what finally did take place, was indeed a Running of the Gauntlet. Rocker is used by the Braves as what they call a closer. Their starting pitchers proceed through the game until they slowly tire in the sixth or seventh innings, and then they are removed and Rocker comes in to finish up.

He is a tall, musclebound man who pitches with great concentration and in prior appearances in which I have seen him he looks in at the batters with fierce contempt. There is a mocking quality about it, almost as if he were a bully and the batter a target of his disdain. That he has a blazing fastball and an almost unhittable slider makes it all the worse to face him. That he had said all these foul things about our great city of immigrants only seemed to make it worse. He was as bigoted as they come.

On this occasion, though, the only thing John Rocker had to do once the pitcher began to tire at the bottom of the eighth was to take the long stroll in from the pitcher's mound to take the ball from the manager who had ordered him in. Instead, Rocker burst out of the bullpen and began to run at full gallop. In the stands, the huge crowd booed and jeered mightily. And the more than 600 police officers assigned to keep the peace visibly stiffened.

When the camera zoomed in to show Rocker during this run, he seemed a different person. There was fear on his face. He was running as fast as he could and he was summoning up the courage to make it happen.

A few things got thrown onto the field in Rocker's wake and one remarkable incident occurred in which a golf ball came looping in over a low part of the outfield wall, missing Rocker by about ten yards.

With the police everywhere, there was speculation that someone had teed up a ball in the parking lot. You'd only need a five iron to make a good lofty shot over that outfield wall, and if you were a good golfer and you had a two way radio with somebody inside to tell you when to do it — well, maybe that's just my imagination. In any case, the ball bounced away and Rocker made it out to the mound.

He seemed to have lost weight since I had last seen him in the playoffs in October. He was not nearly as musclebound and as he proceeded to pitch to the Mets I could see that there was nowhere near the kind of anger in him that I had seen in him before. He looked like a normal baseball player concentrating on getting the pitches over the plate and I do believe he was doing this with the greatest of willpower because there was no doubt he was out there fearful that somebody might take a shot at him.

Rocker struck out the first batter he faced. The second grounded out and so did the third. The Mets had gone 1-2-3. Rocker was out of the inning and that was the end of his appearance for the day. He trotted in from the mound and you could see he was pleased with himself and what he had been able to do. Most of the stadium was quiet as he left the mound, a few fans even cheered him. It was over.

Rocker's appearance in New York that evening reminded me for some reason of a Broadway show called the Titanic which appeared on Broadway three seasons ago. The show had nothing to do with the famous movie the won the Academy Award. In fact, it came out before the movie as a musical put together by veteran Broadway composers and lyricists — many of whom have homes out here. They included Cy Coleman and Bob Larkin, doing music and sets and so forth.

During the second act there comes a time when the great ship, occupying the full width of the (Continued on page 30)

Official Apologies

A Rich Woman's Plan For An Expansion Of Her School Runs Into PR Sensationalism

By Dan Rattiner

Last Friday, a man named Richard Amper stood in front of Guild Hall in East Hampton alongside an easel that had on it a cartoon and made a public apology. The cartoon showed the founder of a local private school, The Ross School, sitting astride a bulldozer mowing down all the trees in a forest while little children danced happily around.

Amper said that the cartoon was meant to be satire portraying his organizations opposition to the Ross School's plan to expand the school into an adjacent woods. He said though he felt satire was protected under the first amendment, he had received letters from representatives of The Ross School saying that he had gone too far, that his portrayal of the children, many of whom are local kids, made it look like they were evil little trolls happy to see the forest torn down and that when you use children this way, it's just gone too far.

He also said he wanted to talk about the radio campaign that his organization, The Long Island Pine Barren Society, was funding. The radio campaign consisted of a single commercial, which had been repeated over and over and in which an actress portraying Courtney Sales Ross, tells other members of the school that she has hired a "director of misinformation" in order to lie to the public about the scope of the project. (The Ross School proposals to expand the school up through 2009 were presented to the planning board in East Hampton several months ago.) Amper said that he had no quarrel with the school, with Mrs. Ross, the faculty, the consultants or the students, and that he and his organization only opposed the expansion plan and the effect it might have on drinking water quality.

The cartoon would not be used again and the radio campaign would be revised with the announcer stating that the little play about the misinformation was only fiction. Amper's apology, along with a ten-page statement, was received by about a dozen reporters and newsmen, and also by a member of the board of The Ross School, Bertram Fields, who is a Los Angeles attorney.

This newspaper is on record favoring The Ross School expansion, and I think as the matter is discussed in town hall, fact is more important than fiction. The fact is that at the present time, the school has about 120 students in buildings that occupy 115,000 square feet in the woods out by the East Hampton Airport. It is not an elite or rich kids school, it is an experimental school and it follows a new and. many feel, a rich and exciting curriculum. The expansion being proposed will take place on 133 adjacent wooded acres and will raise the number of students attending to about 400. The proposal shows 484,000 feet of new construction.

Amper said at his news conference said, "The fact was that that The Ross Institute was far and away the largest project ever proposed on the South Fork."

The part Amper is leaving out is that this is a school for our kids, and given what just about every educator who has visited the school has said, the more of it the better, it is a gift to our community. The second part he left out is that the school describes its entire plan of expansion for the next ten years. Ten years divided into 484,000 square feet, is 48,000 every year. In one year in East Hampton the building department issues over 500,000 square feet of permits of new residential construction and that's just the average for the next ten years, and just in East Hampton.

Mr. Amper's concerns are the quality of the water table. They are my concerns too. It is my belief that when all is said and done, the 48,000 square feet built for our kids every year will tie into a water purification system. The 500,000 square feet of residential building in the town built every year will tie into cesspools. That's where Mr. Amper ough, to be directing his advertising campaigns.

Having said this, there's another matter I'd like to discuss. When I was growing up, the population of the East End was about 50,000. Forty years later, the population is about 100,000. Alarmed? I have news for everybody; it's the birth rate. When I was growing up, there were about 150 million people in America, now there are 300 million. Where do we expect these people to live? Are we going to play Not In My Back Yard with our children?

If you can accept the fact that the population is going to continue to grow, then you have to accept the fact that there are probably going to be more people on the East End. So the issue is, not how to prevent them from coming, but how to prevent them from coming in droves, and how can we best serve those that do come, to provide an excellent quality of life. Forty years ago, the place thrived in the summer and dropped dead in the winter. The major players were a reclusive, blue blood wealthy class, living behind hedgerows. There were also prosperous farm owners, many of whom were in the potato harvesting business. When autumn turned to winter, many of the migrant crop pickers left their barracks and went back down to Florida and many of the local residents went on welfare.

Today we're a year round community that seems to be developing as a cross between Beverly Hills and Palm Beach. Most of the area has been preserved and remains accessible to the general public and there are still lots of places to go where you can find peace and quiet. There is no welfare and everyone seems to be doing just fine, thank you. That said, we seem to be developing as a onenote town, with concerns only about celebrities and tourism and summer homes. How about culture and the academic life? We have a college and I was surprised to see that Southampton Town could not find a place for the Yitzhak Perlman Music School, which wound up on Shelter Island. I think an expanded private school, an experimental one with many local kids attending would be a fine addition to this community.

stage, begins to sink. There are people on board and one end goes down and the other up as a result of pulleys and winches and pumps. It was a marvel of stage design.

Before the show opened, when they were working on it out of town they had gotten mixed reviews. Predictions were it would open and at best have a short run and then close. It is difficult to write a hit.

Two weeks before Broadway opening they began to have previews. These are performances where they work the bugs out and twice during that two week period when it came time for the Titanic to sink, it didn't. This did not bode well. Adjustments were made and for the last three previews the Titanic worked fine. So when they went into opening night there were crossed fingers that the Titantic had been repaired.

Indeed, the performance went smoothly, but when the morning papers came out there were groans of dismay. The show got panned. It was not likely it would last long at all. It just wasn't that good.

Two nights later, however, the Titantic failed to sink again. The people on board ceased singing and dancing. Nothing happened. They went back to the beginning of the song and tried again but again the Titanic stayed rigidly in place. They closed the curtain, and the show's stage manager, with his headphones still on, came out and apologized to the audience for the Titanic's failure to sink, and told them that the show would be cancelled and there would be tickets and rain checks for them for future performances at no cost. The audience then filed out of the theater.

Beginning the next day, and for months after that the theatre was packed with patrons who might have been there to enjoy the show but were also surely there to see if the Titanic, once again, would fail to sink, which it didn't. As a result of all of this, the Titanic became a huge hit, a favorite on Broadway, to which tourists loved to go and to which regular theatregoers would come and bring their friends.

The following spring the show was still running, and the Titanic received six Tony nominations and won four Tony Awards – for best musical, best scenic design, best book from a musical and for best score. Some said it was a bad year for Broadway and there wasn't much competition. Nevertheless there were all the awards and the show ran another year for a total of 540 performances.

This article is being written on Saturday. The second and third games of the Braves-Mets series have been held and Rocker did not pitch. The fourth and final game is this afternoon and the game, as of yesterday, will be sold out and I'll be watching and so will just about everybody else. There were reports that sometime during this series Rocker intends to take the No. 7 subway train and he hasn't yet. Today is the last day.

Vaccine Controversy

Parents At Bridgehampton School Question Mandatory Vaccinations

By Jerry Cimisi

Unfortunately the average person is extremely uninformed about vaccinations. Did you know that cells from aborted human fetuses are used in the manufacture of the Hepatitis A vaccine and also for chicken pox vaccine and that fetal tissue from cows are used in MMR (measles, mumps, rubella) vaccine? Other common ingredients in vaccines are formaldehyde and aluminum.

The proverbial man or woman in the street will affirm it is for the individual and public good that schools require students to receive a mandated series of vaccinations.

Yet a small but insistent group of parents at the Bridgehampton School (which services grades pre-K through 12) strongly disagree. It began when two parents whose daughter had attended pre-K in Bridgehampton since February, 1999 were given notice in April that their daughter would not be allowed into kindergarten there in September without the required vaccinations. The school had not previously raised this issue before.

Curiously, although these two parents were notified in April, other parents with students with none or only some of the mandated vaccines were not given similar notices by the school until they spoke out in support of individual decision regarding vaccinations.

To be expempt from vaccinations, a student's family must provide the school with a reason for refusal based on religious grounds, or notice from a physician that the student in question should not be vaccinated for medical reasons.

The parents at Bridgehampton are not the first dissenters of the federally mandated vaccination guidelines, nor, it is certain, will they be the last.

In 1992, Susan and Andrew Bailey of East Quogue, who had five children in school, brought the Westhampton School district to court when the district - after a number of their children had attended school there for years - ordered that to continue in the district the children would have to have the necessary six vaccinations.

It happened over the summer," Mrs. Bailey said in a recent phone interview. "It started with Bruce, who was going from elementary to junior high. The school sent us notice that Bruce would need to be vaccinated. We replied that we had five children in the district, that vaccination had never been a problem. The district responded that all the children would now have to be vaccinated."

The law states that a district can allow a child to remain in school for seven to fourteen days without vaccinations. "When school started," said Mrs. Bailey, "we sent all of them. The school took the junior high and high school kids out after the first week; the elementary school allowed two weeks. We went to court, got a temporary restraining order that allowed the children back in school." A month later Chief Judge Thomas Platt of the U.S. District Court, Eastern District of New York ordered that the district, "by enforcing the New York Public Health Law Section 2164, was "in violation of plaintiff's constitutional and other rights."

Students can be exempt from vaccinations if the supplied to the board read. The fact that vaccines family practices a religion that would object to vaccinations. The school district said the Baileys, who were claiming a religious exemption, were not part of a recognized religion. Judge Platt ruled in 1990 the Public Health Law had been amended to the extent that parents did not have to belong to a "recognized religious organization." If their honest spiritual belief was opposed to vaccination that would be acceptable to the court.

The history, current law, application of that law and exemption from the law are an intricate weave of facts and bureaucracy, which is being played out in the present situation in Bridgehampton.

The first parents to get a letter requiring vaccination were Jo-Ann and myself. Our daughter had been in the pre-K program since February, 1999. Up to that point there had been no question from the school about our daughter lacking the mandated vaccinations. We submitted a letter to the school stating that we had given our daughter some vaccines and not others because we wanted to make a vaccine by vaccine judgement on the matter, not accept all vaccines because they were mandated.

It should be added we now regret having given her any vaccines at all. The reasons for that will be clear further on in this article.

After our original letter the school responded that the only way we could exempt our daughter from the vaccines were on religious grounds.

In fact, our objections to the vaccines were simultaneously spiritual and medical. We are both vegans. We do not eat animals products nor use animal products such as leather. The basis for this is simple: not to use the life of another, to practice a harmless way of life. "We do not believe in the de-spiritualization of the non-human animal. and do not exploit them at our whim," our letter use the byproducts of slaughtered animals puts them in the category to be shunned, just as we would shun eating meat. To use a product that is a result of violence is to be a part of that violence.

The letter continued with two definitions of religion taken from the Random House Dictionary:

"1. Concern over what exists beyond the visible world, differentiated from philosophy in that it operates through faith or intuition rather than

"2. A point or matter of ethics or conscience. "We believe in something greater than ourselves: God, if you will; a God of compassion toward all creation."

Our three page letter detailing this belief did not satisfy the school attorney's however, Payne, Wood and Littlejohn of Melville, who advised the board that we had not, in their eyes, met the criteria for vaccine exemption. We found this out in a frustrating school board meeting on June 26 - a time when we were originally told we would be given a decision on the matter.

The decision-making process, or, rather, the seeming lack of one, was frustrating from the beginning. Bridgehampton Superintendent Dr. Stuart Rachlin told East Hampton Star reporter David Shargel that the review of unvaccinated students at Bridgehampton occurred because the state recently passed legislation that all pupils entering seventh grade this fall must have the Hepatitis B vaccination,

In the first weeks after Dr. Rachlin notified us, there was a vagueness about just who would make the ultimate decision - him? the School Board? the attorneys? - and just when it would be made. At this point no other parents of unvaccinated children had been notified that they must supply reasons for refusing vaccines. In a phone conversation in late May or early June, Dr. Rachlin said that the ultimate decision about accepting our daughter without vaccines was his, technically, but that, regardless of his feelings on the matter, he would abide by the decision of the board. "They are my employers," he said. The role of the attorneys seemed that they would advise the board who would then advise the superinten-

Through a good deal of June Dr. Rachlin was using vacation days and was not at the school. In a phone conversation from his home he informed us that our more detailed letter concerning our objections had been sent to the school's attorney's.

On the third week of June, days before school ended, School Board President John Wyche told us a decision in the mater would be forthcoming on June 26 - though the board had only just gotten all the pertinent information before it

At the June 26th Board meeting, Mr. Wyche said a review of unvaccinated students showed that only one student had been deemed eligible for exemption on religious grounds. The parents of other students would have to provide more convincing arguments for exemption. One mother of three children, all of whom have been in the school at various times (one still attends) asked why, after her five year assocation with the school, this issue was just coming up. Her refusal to vaccinate had never been an issue before. Mr. Wyche's reply, contrary to what Dr. Rachlin told the East Hampton Star, was that a more clearcut policy on vaccinations was needed.

Mr. Wyche told us we would be getting another letter from the attorneys asking for more information. We told the board that we were willing to go to court on the matter. Mr. Wyche told us the board would definitely make a decision on our case at the next board meeting, July 10.

At the end of the week we got the letter, which was the same, word for word, as the letter received by two other families — who had not been notified (as we had been, in April) until they came out in support of us.

We had felt our three page letter in May had clearly outlined our spiritual objections to vaccinations, but the attorneys' letter said, "Conclusory statements such as 'I have a religious objection to immunization' [the attorneys' were using this – I believe – as an example: we had never used that sentence in any communication to the lawyers] are not adequate. You must document the background and basis of your religious beliefs." How does one document the realization that one should practice what is a nonviolence to all living things?

What was equally, if not more irking was the line, "Scientific and/or medical concerns are not allowable reasons for objecting to immunization."

Isn't this absurd? Mandated vaccines are apparently instituted for scientific reasons – but one cannot object to them on scientific grounds.

The science of vaccine is seemingly straightforward. An element of the disease producing virus or bacteria is introduced into the body. The body then produces antibodies to the pathogen and thus confers an immunity. Sometimes for a number of years, sometimes, theoretically, for life.

The first vaccine was for smallpox. A serum taken from the pus of infected cows was injected into human beings. Back in the 1700s, Benjamin Franklin and his brother, running a paper in Boston came out against vaccination. On the side for it, perhaps surprisingly, were Puritans such as Cotton Mather.

In later centuries, scientists, at least those among the status quo, would increasingly support the burgeoning practice (and industry) of vaccination. The majority of adherents to mainstream religions would support these miracle weapons against disease too, though some of the faithful within those religions took their definition of God to include not allowing disease causing agents to be injected into the body. And some faiths are totally against vaccination.

The apparent virtual eradication of polio in the post-War west is attributed to the Salk and Sabin vaccines that were introduced in the 1950s. Yet there are two important facts that are little known.

First, polio had been in decline for decades preceding the introduction of the vaccines. Diseases have their own life span. Bubonic plague is not an epidemic anywhere in the world; this is not attributable to any vaccine. Even provaccination scientists admit that better diet and sanitary conditions may do more than vaccines to stay disease.

In addition, incidents of polio in New England rose dramatically immediately following mass innoculation programs in the '50s. At present, all cases of polio, if small in number, in the United States are directly attributable to the vaccine.

Also in the 1950s the government was aware that 350 million doses of the polio vaccine contained a simian virus (primate cells had been used in its culturing) SV40, yet these doses were not recalled. In later decades the virus was linked to a rare form of cancer. How many people today have had that simian virus in their bloodstreams?

The DPT vaccine (Diptheria/Pertussis/Tetanus) has been linked to Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS) — according to the manfacturer's release that physician's receive and which patients can request, though most do not. "Sudden infant death syndrome has been reported following administration of DPT. The significance is unclear...85% of SIDS cases occur in the period one through six months of age, with the peak incidence at age two to four months." The DPT vaccine is given at two, four and six months.

Shabbat on the Beach

Every Friday through Labor Day, The Jewish Center of the Hamptons will hold KIDS' SHABBAT at 5:30 p.m. at Main Beach in East Hampton with Rabbi David Gelfand, Cantor Debra Stein-Davidson and Rabbi Alon Levkovitz, with surprises for toddlers & young children each week.

This innovative program, sponsored by the family of Ruth Christenfeld, includes singing, story-telling, Sabbath rituals & customs, and different themes each Friday.

KIDS' SHABBAT welcomes residents & guests, and invites parents & grandparents to bring their children each week or to drop by on occasion.

Who's Here:

By Joan Zandell

It's a glorious Sunday morning over the Fourth of July weekend, and Faith Popcorn has just added a new dog, and a new nanny to her household to accompany her new daughter g.g. We agree it's a great feeling having all that energy in the house. I have been looking forward to this interview all week long, and after having read Faith's latest book, EVEolution, The Eight Truths of Marketing to Women, I am eager to get started. Whether you're from Venus or from Mars, Faith Popcorn predicts that the next 1000 years will reflect female values. What is interesting to me, about both the timing of this book and the timing of our interview is, that in many non-business circles it is believed that as a culture, we are coming into a shift in values from patriarchal to matriarchal values. Both metaphysical and astrological experts hold this belief. And the belief is held, not only by women I might add. If you don't believe me, I insist you call Michael Lutin's 900 Astrology hotline and listen to this week's horoscope for the entire planet. (By the way, Michael Lutin is the official astrologer for Vanity Fair magazine.) Not only does he claim that this shift is happening, he claims that it has officially begun as of July 1, 2000. Today, the day of the interview is July 2, 2000.

Hmmmm. Carl Jung would have called this, a moment of synchronicity.

After settling in, Faith and I begin our chat. What are these feminine values that will transform the next 1000 years exactly? "Safe relationships in which women feel protected," says Popcorn. She believes that women need interconnectedness, mutual trust and respect in business as well as personal relationships. We're in for 1000 years of Conscience (when was the last time you heard anyone talk about THAT?), and a return to ethics. (Yikes! Ethics? I think I just heard a billionaire scream.) Does that sound like the basis for your present workplace or your primary relationships? Well, hang on to your hats, because ten to twenty years from now, it will. Faith Popcorn has accurately foretold the business and personal trends that have defined our lives for the past two decades.

Born in Shanghai, Popcorn lived there until the age of five. Her father was stationed there as a member of the C.I.A. She remembers it as being incredibly beautiful, with a clean Yanktze River and a wonderful and warm Ahma (nanny). She began her sixth year in New York City where she attended public schools for her lower education and graduated from a creative and coveted New York City High School known as the School for the Performing Arts. Performing Arts was where you dreamt of going if you were an exceptionally creative child.

Faith discovered that she had the ability to spot trends years later while working with an advertising agency. She says, "I was a cultural maniac where I read every single magazine and I went to every movie," and engaged in what she now terms trend-trekking. "I would come back to the agency and tell them what I thought was going to happen. And everything I thought was going to happen, happened. And I knew I wasn't psychic. So I tried to figure out what that was. And I formalized this way of trend-predicting."

According to Popcorn, the next big trend is toward female values, female standards, and female modeling. She begins EVEolution by telling anyone who will listen, what women really want! (She should know - she's a woman and a predictor!) And after intensive interviewing and research, we have an answer! Women want to feel safe, protected, respected and honored, they want to be told the truth, to feel valued by the people who surround them, they want inter-connectedness and appreciation. "The rules of marketing are just like the rules of love," says Popcorn.

"...pick up a copy of your local newspaper. Now imagine the date on the front page is three years from now. What would the headlines be?"

I know from personal experience, that when I have interviewed single women about why they are single, they tell me that their personal relationships lack precisely the qualities Popcorn talks about in her book EVEolution. Rather than remain in a relationship that falls short of their standards, they choose to be alone. Ditto, their jobs.

In the never ending battle of the sexes, men - whether in the love area or the marketing area

- have been accused of an inability to anticipate women's needs, whereas women are trained to anticipate the needs of their husbands', bosses, sons, etc... Popcorn feels that anticipatory marketing will be a cornerstone of EVEolutionary marketing psychology. And in this case, because women now have so much buying clout, WOMEN ARE THE MARKET. I asked Popcorn, what if you happen to lack the ability or skill to anticipate - how could you explain it or break it down, as if you were defining anticipating for dummies? She said, "Imagine you are in your office and you pick up a copy of your local newspaper. Now, imagine that the date on the front page is two years from now. What would the headlines be? What would the food pagebe?"

After considerable thought, I came to the conclusion that that is not an easy exercise. On the one hand, it can be tremendous fun if you let your imagination rip. But what if you're not that imaginative? Psychoanalysts might argue that many a family row has started over anticipating an incorrect response, and behaving accordingly, causing all sorts of misunderstandings and miscommunications. That is why Popcorn is a firm believer in asking what people want. Particularly if the people you are addressing (women) influence 80% of all the buying that takes place in this country. By asking women what they want, you can create and offer additional products that you think they might like, based on their present tastes and circumstances. She sees companies as parents of sorts and consumers as responsible and involved co-parents – communicating with companies. The most interesting part of all of this marketing talk is that money is never discussed. The Eight Truths of Marketing to Women is not about money. It is about communication and meeting one another's needs, and that translates into money in an empowering way in which everybody wins.

You might as well be talking tribal society where the gatherers (the women) would go from town to town bartering with other women gatherers for the things that they needed to feed and clothe their families. Everything has changed, and yet nothing has changed. Now imagine that you are living in that tribal village — Rising at dawn to prepare breakfast for your family before heading out to "work." On you business trip to the neighboring village, what would be more important? Nurturing a long-term relationship or forcing a transaction in the present? Popcorn believes that the long-term benefits of nurturing relationships today, rather than forcing a transaction in the present, is that this generation of consumers will lead to the next. "If you do the right thing by the consumer, you get the FIVE generations that are ahead of her." Are you listening? Five generations. And why is that? Because if you do right by her mother, she in turn will sing your praises to her daughter, and her grand-daughter, etc. It makes sense. Popcorn even claims that if you happen to have a bad relationship with your mother, initially you will use other products, but eventually, you'll go back to the products from your childhood. So after a full day of bartering and walking endless miles out in the wilderness, you return home, prepare dinner for your family, put your children to sleep and try to get some quality time with your spouse before getting up and doing it all over again. Tribal village or Hamptons home, the needs surrounding the daily routine are remarkably alike.

There are many wonderful examples and case histories with which Popcorn demonstrates EVEolution The Eight Rules of Marketing to Women. However, toward the end of her book, Popcorn writes a chapter on why Revlon has failed and what she and her company BrainReserve, would do to resurrect it. I asked her if she's heard from Ronald Perelman? She responds, "Yes. And we have an appointment with his CEO." Perelman would be a fool not to be present.

For those of you who would like to hear more about Faith Popcorn and her latest book, EVEolution The Eight Rules of Marketing to Women, she will be at Guild Hall on Sunday, July 9, at 2 p.m. talking about her vision of the future, to be followed by a book signing. For those of you who haven't had the pleasure, she's inspiring in person. Even her haircolor is inspiring. And that's all I'm going to say on the matter. If you want to know what I mean, you'll just have to come and see for yourself.

Later on, Moo began to hold his own against this huge Great Dane. He'd run underneath her, trotting along beneath her legs and she wouldn't know where he'd gone. When the Dane would lie down, he'd jump on her with all four paws, lay on her back and bite her ears.

There's a teddy bear quality about him- he has all this fur - and we often think that somewhere in there, there must be a zipper.

One of the most extraordinary things I saw Moo do was one day when the Dane was by the slider, but couldn't get the door open - from the outside it's more difficult for some reason, I think the handle is smaller - and the Dane was trying and trying to little effect. Moo, who was sleeping in the kitchen woke up, ran out through the little dog door and tried helping the Dane slide the door open which was a ridiculous thing to do, but he tried nevertheless. Eventually we came over and opened the slider.

Moo has forced me to modify my opinion of terriers. It was true I found, that I couldn't depend upon Moo to come when I called. I'd take him to the beach and he wouldn't come and I'd call him more sternly and that seemed to only send him away. I thought that this was a big problem. I'd have to get the oar back out. But, then I found out something else extraordinary, Moo is a sucker for sweet talk, if you call him sternly, he won't come, thinking something bad is going to happen. But, immediately after calling him sternly, if you call him very sweetly, as if you've got something for him or just want to pet him or pick him up, he comes running over. So, even under the most difficult circumstances you can get him to come with you whenever you want.

Cathie says that when Moo does something bad and you yell at him - he chewed a good part of the aerial off my cell phone the other day he stays sad until you make up with him. He could stay sad for twenty-four hours because of what you said to him about the cell phone. So it's important to put the thing into perspective as soon as you can, go over and scratch him behind the ears, say nice things to him and he'll jump onto your lap and purr and lick your hand. It's all over.

Cathie says that Moo is eager to make up with you because he doesn't like to get in trouble. He gets in trouble anyway once in a while, so you don't have to worry about that, but he just seems to take it all so personally. On the other hand, he requires a lot of attention. If you go out for the day without saying goodbye and leave him alone in the house without instructions he will sometimes get really mad and do bad things; you come back, he's torn down the curtains, peed on the rug, and turned the kitchen garbage upside down, but when you walk back in the door he's ready to apologize for his sins.

"Just like me," he seems to say. After all, he's only human.

Who's Here:

By Joan Zandell

Before radiccio, before farm raised salmon, there was Joe Guerra. Born and raised in the Bay Ridge/Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn, Joe was the first member of his family to go to college where he studied business and accounting. Upon graduation he decided to go into the family business (his father owned a fish store), but his father would have none of it. Forbidding him to join the family business, Joe it appeared, diploma in hand was on his own.

In 1982, he bought his first little seafood shop. He would provide fish for the top restaurants in Manhattan - Lutece, Chanterelle, and the World Trade Center among others. This young kid was getting a reputation for providing the best quality fish around. One day he received a call from a young chef in Los Angeles who was working at Ma Maison. His name was Wolfgang Puck. Joe was about 24 or 25 at the time, and you could fly to L.A. for $99. The next day. Joe left for L.A.. He walked into Ma Maison at one o'clock in the afternoon while the owner dined with Orson Welles and headed straight for the kitchen. He and Wolfgang discussed what he'd need, but the freight would be so expensive? How would they get around it? Wolfgang had an idea. He wrote down the names of fifteen of the hottest chefs in L.A. at the time suggesting that Joe go and see every one of them. So Joe took the list and started walking door to door, until practically everyone on the list had placed an order. For the next four years Joe would supply restaurants like Michael's. Valentino's. Adriano's, Jimmy's in Beverly Hills and Trumps. Every Tuesday at 3pm he'd go to Kennedy Airport and load all the cartons of fish into one container. Then he would take a commercial flight to Los Angeles, rent a van, meet the container and deliver the contents to all his L.A. clients. Joe laughs when he says he was the first person to send live soft-shell crabs to L.A. "That was in the days before radiccio, before farm salmon, it was another world." He did this run for four years, and from the proceeds, he bought the small Citarella fish market that would begin the empire, on the corner of 75th Street and Broadway. At the same time in 1985, he became a partner with a man who owned stall 4 in the Fulton Fish Market. By 1990, through a series of fortuitous circumstances Joe would own stalls 4,5,6,and 7. As we will see, Joe Gurrera and serendipity go hand in hand. Quickly one upon the other, the changes came.

Joe always felt that fish stores needed revamping. They all had the same look and smell that he remembered from his childhood. There was the inevitable sawdust on the floor and some indecipherable smell that followed you around as you shopped. His store would be different. The first thing he would do was to put granite tiles on the floor. Every square inch of his store would be pristine. Cleanliness, excellent quality, attention to detail, and a new aesthetic would be his trademarks. All his fish were the best that money could buy and were displayed surrounded by ice to insure freshness and cleanliness. A self-proclaimed perfectionist,

Joe GurreraOf Citarella

all the counters, cabinets, and display cases were, and continue to be, custom designed to his specifications. The stainless steel counters and cabinets must be made from a specific type of stainless steel for durability. The protection barriers must hang from a certain type of wire and must be made of glass. When Joe creates a store, it is created for longevity and quality. To this day, he personally oversees all the softshell crabs and shad.

In 1985 he started the legendary food window displays for which Citarella is known. Not only did it attract customers; its windows became the talk of the Upper West Side. People would stand in the street watching the design through the front window as it was being created. By 1990, the growth that Joe had in mind. The world and the way it saw food had changed dramatically in 20 years. And Joe would be there on the cutting edge of change.

When 1995 arrived Joe purchased a warehouse on 18th Street, where he planned to store and prepare the food that he would sell in the Broadway Store. On October 10, 1997 he received a call from a real estate broker who offered him another space, for a second store on 75th Street and Third Avenue. He took it. He hadn't been planning to buy another space because he had decided to renovate the second story of his store on Broadway ...but what the ...it was all growing so quickly and all at the same time! December 1998 Joe receives another phone call - how about doing a take-out store on 6th Avenue and 49th Street? What sorts of things will he sell at Rockefeller Center? Coffee, muffins, panini, wraps, oysters and clams on the half shell - what could be better when you're on the run? By September '99 the lease for the 6th Avenue Store is signed and his designer David Rockwell is ready to go. By the end of June 1999, Joe receives yet another call - and this time it is to open a store in Water Mill. He is offered two spaces - one in the back of the Plaza, a perfect place for his main store, and another, smaller space on route 27 that is ideal as an extension of the Cafe concept like the one at Rockefeller Center. He now lives in East Hampton and says he adores the Hamptons in the winter. But Joe Gurrera is not a man who likes to slow down. In addition to the Citarella Plaza in Water Mill, he is now involved with a 40,000 square foot city property on West 126th Street, the old Tastee Bread Factory and several other buildings that are attached to it. So don't be surprised when a brand new Citarella Store opens on West 125th Street in Harlem.

I'm exhausted just listening. I ask, when was the last time he had a day off? He takes a moment to think, smiles and says, "Oh some time in March." Now, most people would be complaining, no screaming that they hadn't taken a proper vacation, were dying of exhaustion or never wanted to work again. To look at Joe one would think he just got back from a restful week in the country. He is fit, wearing a black tee-shirt and shorts.

I admit, I am baffled. After all these years, and so many accomplishments, what continues to drive him?

"Passion. I love what I do. It isn't about the money. It's never been about the money. It's about excellence. I could make a lot more money by cutting corners, but that's not my way. I care about quality. I'd rather make less money and have the best product around. I wouldn't be happier making more money. I build to last with style." He works seven days a week, and he assures me that he parties just as hard.

Joe buses his employees in everyday from New York. He has rented a house in Noyak for them for the summer, and has four full-timers starting this week. He says that the community has been incredibly receptive, supportive and lovely and (Continued on next page)

he bought the Citarella building on Broadway. With it came a tenant, a store called Pandemonium that was next door to the Citarella fish market. Well, one morning the IRS came a knocking on their door for back payment of taxes, confiscated everything in sight and closed Pandemonium down. Joe Gurrera decided it was time to be in the meat business. Suddenly, there were delectable rotisserie chickens, steaks, chops and prepared foods to be had at the Citarella market. Clearly, even owning the building and the store next door would not be enough space to contain he is grateful for their support. But Joe seems to attract support. He has had 3 great mentors, and in addition, he says unequivocally that he would not have been able to build his business without his Chef Fedele Bruno, his right hand Charlie Gagliardo "the meat man," and his left hand John Corbo - the head of operations. In addition, there are all the loyal employees who have put in sixteen hour days (but never two in a row), and who continue to help him build his business by coming out from New York especially to do so. He turns to me as we walk through his store, "I wouldn't be able to accomplish anything without all my key people and loyal employees. I am so appreciative of their loyalty and hard work." And he continues to forge new alliances. One such relationship is with Latham Farms on the North Fork, and others are with local fishermen. Not only can he bring food from New York to Watermill, now he can bring produce and local fish to New York.

As we continue to walk through the store it dawns on me that it is Father's Day. Joe then shows me a Father's Day card his employees have given him - it is the photo of a bull dog in a bathrobe. When you open the card it reads. "Rough on the outside, soft on the inside." As I hand it back to him, commenting on how I'd never heard of staff members giving their boss a Father's Day Card before, he beams as if he had just received the biggest compliment in the world. When people ask him how will he manage this new store in Water Mill? He responds, "I've done it before. I can do it again." He hopes that customers from as far away as Hampton Bays will take the drive out to see him. After all, there's nothing like him anywhere in the Hamptons, and he promises the kind of service that up until now was only possible in New York.

Joe has a delightful and attractive wife Yusi, and three wonderful children Anthony, Nancy and Helen. He met his wife Yusi when she was a tenant in the Citarella building on the Upper West Side. He laughs and says, "Yeah, she was on top of me." When I ask him about her he says that his wife is very patient. They all work in the family business along with Joe, and two were in the Water Mill store on Father's Day, and the third was on the way. Joe was planning to go out to dinner with his family. And after meeting them all, I must admit it was difficult to leave. I shopped, I tasted spectacular olives, I talked to his friendly and humorous staff who encouraged me to taste the lobster salad, at a reasonable $7.99 a half pound, which was, by the way spectacular. I perused the impressive selection of imported cheeses and fresh pastas, the fresh and reasonably priced produce, and of course wafting through the air was the familiar smell of the famous Citarella rotisserie chickens. As I left the store Joe escorted me to the door. "We'll talk again. Soon." After spending the afternoon with this man I understood why his employees would give him a Father's Day Card But I think you should go to Citarella to find out for yourself. Just ask for Joe.

review: indian field

Yvette E. Somekh

"How do you know where you're going if you don't know from whence you came?" That question was asked by Chief Cooper just prior to watching Indian Field, a one act play performed at the Deep Hollow Ranch. The question is an intriguing one. It also speaks for itself. And an answer was given in a simple and easy to digest manner in a beautiful setting on a warm summer night in Montauk.

Allow me to pass on to you a little of what I learned. The Deep Hollow Ranch and the surrounding areas were known as Indian Field. Indian Field, as you might have guessed, was home to a tribe of Native Americans. The tribe was called the Montauketts. The Montauketts were a peaceful tribe with no concept of land ownership. It was their belief that the land belonged to the people as a whole not to individuals. As a result of this generosity of spirit, the ownership of this land was easily transferred to developer Arthur Benson and anyone else savvy enough to manipulate them.

Understanding that, let us move on to the evening itself. Rusty Leaver, owner of Deep Hollow and producer of Indian Field, opened his gates to us to entertain and inform. We were invited to take a trip back in time. Horse drawn wagons took us through the Ranch, which is also the oldest cattle ranch in the United States. Looking across the pastures you could feel the peace that once belonged to its occupants. You could also see the back of Stephen "Talkhouse" Pharaoh on his way to the same campsite. About two thirds of the way there, Buffalo Bill Cody rode up and introduced himself to us, and promised to meet us up there as well.

Once at the campsite we were treated to a Cajun feast and Bar-B-Que cooked by none other then Chef Kevin "Sweet P" Prejean. The menu was varied enough to satisfy every palate. We ate our meal at picnic tables, chatted with guests and watched the kids run around the open fields.

Prior to the first show, I was able to talk with Chief Cooper, newly elected chief to the Montauketts. Chief Cooper is able to trace his Long Island heritage back to the 1600's. He told me that Native American history is passed down from generation to generation through the art of storytelling. It is each parent's duty to teach his child his heritage. In this way, nothing is lost and all have their history at their fingertips.

Chief Cooper, at the request of Rusty Leaver, shared his history with Genie Chipps Henderson. Genie was able to write a short screenplay incorporating the main points in an easily understandable and entertaining manner. This group then sought out Anita Brown to direct. Rusty, hired some top notch actors to play about four or five parts each, and so local dinner theatre at the Ranch was born.

Prior to the play, Chris McDaniel, playing Buffalo Bill entertained us with a short one man show. He told us that cowboys, back in the days before television, entertained themselves and each other with tricks using the only tools available to them: bullwhips and ropes. He brought up a few brave souls from the audience and showed us what he could do. After much laughter and applause we were ready for the main event.

The main event was the play. I love theatre where few actors play many parts. It almost becomes audience participation. Everyone enjoys the quick changes and recognizes the effort. Chris McDaniel, besides playing Buffalo Bill, was P.T. Barnum and our host and narrator. Evan Thomas played Lion Gardiner, Stephen "Talkhouse" Pharaoh, and Arthur Benson, a 19th century land speculator. Vincent Doty played Chief Wyandanch, Walt Whitman and Judge Blackmar. Finally, Heather Flower was played by Heather Tankersly. They each also played local townspeople, changing with each generation as time progressed. The efforts of everyone can be further appreciated when one becomes aware that all of this was put together with only one week of rehearsals.

This was a project done from the heart. Rusty Leaver wanted you to learn about the land. Chief Cooper donated his invaluable information to help you learn about his ancestors. The Native American costumes were made by members of the Montaukett tribe. Genie Henderson spent many hours researching the facts and shaping them in a manner understandable to children of all ages. Anita Brown's faith in her actors was evident in their delightful interpretation of the play which will run throough to Labor Day at the Ranch. Call to reserve your bale of hay on that horse drawn wagon. The phone number is 631 668-2744. Bring your kids and your appetites. And don't forget to bring your curiosity and sense of fun.

he Sheltered Islander by sally Hynn

Observations of an Islander #113 Is It Safe To Come Out Yet? Are They Gone?

It's terrible what happened to me since my return in 1997. I've become Islandized. I used to see the Islandized locals and wonder why they hated the tourists so much since this is a tourist based economy. Why didn't they welcome them with open arms? How much trouble could they be?

Can we talk? I have witnessed one of the nicest women on Shelter Island who works in the Post Office tested to the limit of human endurance. How could someone not understand that post office box they rented and released at the end of last summer, would not be automatically available for them this summer? How could the post office know to hold your forwarded mail until you got here to pick it up for general delivery unless you told them?

We have a resident Grinch on this Island. A storekeeper who is consistently in a foul mood. I have never seen him smile or say a kind word to anyone. (Some people say they have seen him smile, but I think it's like a Loch Ness sighting.) For the longest time I wondered why. Recently I saw him tangle with a string of rude, selfimportant, arrogant city people. Now I understand him. The tourists got to him years ago. They aggravate him so much in the summer that it stores up in his head and lasts through the winter, poor dear man.

I tried to pull into Piccozzi's for gas and the entrance was blocked by a parked car from Conn. Can you imagine blocking the entrance lane of a gas station?

In the IGA, I always let people in front of me who just have a few things, especially if they have kids or they're workmen and it's evident that they're on their lunch hour. I have been castigated twice by tourists for doing this. "He has to wait on line like everybody else." They act like no one else exists or has any entitlement to the smallest kindness. These people have never heard of the Martin Buber "I-Thou" concept. They are members of the "I-and only I exist" Flush Limbaugh school of thought.

I am ready to machine gun the bicyclists who travel two and three abreast across the road. They ignore the line of cars behind them, why? Because they're on vacation and they paid plenty to be here so they are going to pedal as slow as they want and take in the scenery. My brother had a great idea, we're getting those airhorn in a can things. I can't wait to roll up behind some biker or skater and blast away, they'll think an eighteen wheeler is three feet behind them, ooohhh, it's too good...

Tourists speed all over the Island. Why? There's nowhere to go... they have to take a ferry to get off the Island... they came here to relax didn't they? So what's with the speeding? There are no traffic lights or passing lanes on the Island. Speeding only gets deer and bicyclists killed... okay, wait, there may be an up-side I didn't consider here...Unlike tourists, locals talk to each other; business and personal exchanges flow seamlessly together. Exchanging pleasantries is normal and expected. I have seen tourists become incensed at fact that someone takes an extra twenty seconds at the teller's window to inquire about the health of a mutual friend.

The general impatience of tourists surprises me because they come here to experience a quieter, simpler, slower existence - and they get pissed off when they see it. Hey, this ain't Manhatten, if you're in a hurry, you're on the wrong Island!

Author Note: Some articles back I mistakenly credited the Harvey Gamage Foundation with paying for the Schooner trip for our seventh grade. It was in fact the Shelter Island Education Foundation. Before I made this mistake, I wondered how many Islanders read my column. Since my mistake I can say a lot of people read the column.

elaine k.g. benson, her daughter's column

I don't understand why everyone seems to want to be an artist. It's a hard way to make a living and involves a lot of work, potential let downs and for most people costs them money. Let me try to explain.

With or without a formal education in art, an artist must prepare a portfolio or at least a presentation. One needs slides or at bear minimum photos. Photos or slides are sent out to galleries along with a cover letter and a bio describing past shows, education, collections and at times, an artist's statement. The slides are expensive and you're lucky to get them back in a timely fashion, if at all. You are required to provide a SASE for return of all materials and it is best to inquire about viewing policy before sending anything. All the galleries vary about when they want to see new work and what they want to see.

There are over 700 artists on file in the Hamptons. The Artist's Alliance of the East End has a good list. Southampton Artists also has a large membership. There is some cross over but not a lot. There is a Montauk artist's organization and another group working out of Riverhead. The South Fork Craftsman's Guild works out of the Secret Gallery in Watermill. I don't know of anyone who has made a database combining all of these lists. I think the Parrish Art Museum may have the best list. There was a competition at the Parrish a few years ago and most artists with a local connection tried to get into the show that was organized from the competition. It was a great show, in fact.

I know why I paint. It is because I'm driven to. It is a passion. I couldn't stop if I wanted to. I paint for myself and not for the audience. It is not about making money. In fact, it costs me money.

I have had many painters ask me what they should paint or even tell me I should show their work because it sells. There is more to what makes a good gallery than simply selling. Shows have to be interesting and have some focus. Fine Art is not the same as illustration and is not the same as commercial art. There are a number of different businesses that fall under the heading of the Art market. Some galleries show exclusively dead

We can't all become famous. Many of the world's greatest artists didn't sell well during their own lifetimes. An artist has to be able to handle constant rejection and still go back for more.

The truth is sadly laughable. You work like a demon. You're thrilled when you get a show. You work on deadline to complete the work, frame it or pay someone to frame it, make your list and your bio, get the work to the gallery, and finally conquer your fear to attend your opening. You're lucky if you sell anything and much luckier if you break even. A few weeks later the show comes down and you start the whole process over again. Ah, what a life! -Kimberly Goff

Manmade Uranium-233 Found In Lab Sewage Treatment Plant

Tests conducted by the Suffolk County Health Department and the Peconic River Community Oversight Committe created by the Suffolk Legislature have revealed manmade levels of uranium-233 in the sand filter beds of the Brookhaven National Laboratory's sewage treatment plant. This radioactive element has never been discovered as a contaminant on the laboratory's grounds. Suffolk County found levels of uranium 300 percent higher than those reported by the lab itself.

According to a press release by the Community Alliance for Lab Accountability, the uranium samples were discovered in the same location that is contaminated by plutonium.

Peter Maniscalco, Chair of the Peconic River Community Oversight Committee said, "Uranium-233 is manmade and 30,000 times more radioactive than uranium-238.... The lab has a responsibility to contain the contaminated soils and prevent them from becoming airborne and re-suspended."

The source of the uranium is not yet known.

Agencies Reach Agreement on Groundwater Cleanup at Lab

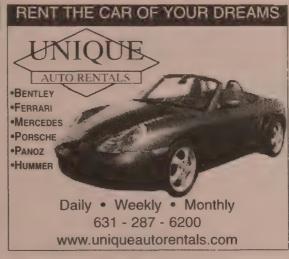

The Department of Energy, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and the New York State Department of Environmental Conservation have reached agreement at the end of June on the cleanup of groundwater contamination at Brookhaven National Laboratory.

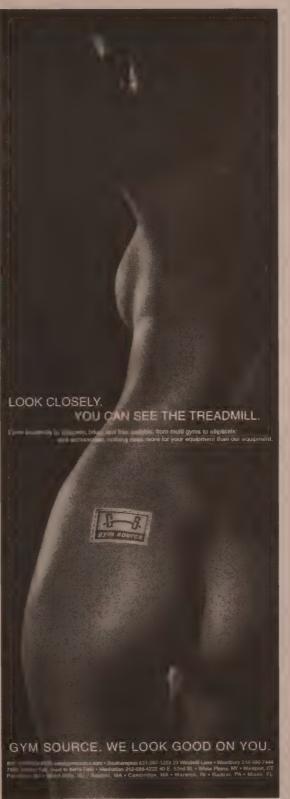

For the on-site tritium plume the plans mandates the installation of new treatment systems in addition to those already in operation. Groundwater containing tritium will be pumped and transported off-site to a licensed disposal facility.

For on-site strontium-90, extraction wells will use an ion-exchange process to separate strontium-90 from water, which will then be shipped offsite for disposal.

The lab will also add additional monitoring wells for continual analysis of groundwater.

The groundwater Contamination Plan, Operable Unit II Record of Decision is available at the lab's website, www.oer.dir.bnl.gov and at the Middle Island Public Library, the Mastic-Moriches-Shirley Public Library, the Brookhaven National Laboratory Reserach Library and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Region II Library in New York City.

race, the Coast Guard Station was closing the gap on the Molly B.

There was nothing whatever that Carl could do. The barge with the Coast Guard Station was ten times the weight of his ship and now it was barreling down at him at about twenty-six knots. His next job would be to get out of its way and after that with the line slack, to cut it loose. The Coast Guard Station would then go out into the Atlantic and it go as far as the storm would take it. Maybe to Block Island, maybe to the coast of Nantucket, maybe all the God damn way to Europe.

At the very least, Carl thought, I will lose my job.

Thinking comes quickly in desperate situations. The wind was howling and now the four-story building, the dormers high up on the roof, loomed over the little boat as it came up alongside. Carl, suddenly with an idea, screamed for one of the mates to take the wheel and then scampered down to the gunwale on the starboard side.

"Try and get it to come alongside, pull up alongside if you can," Darenberg said, "I'm gonna jump across."

"Are you crazy?" The mate said.

"Move!" Carl yelled.

The V8 engine was wide open, smoke beginning to pour from the engine room, but the mate did as he was told and at what must have been twenty-four knots, Carl leaped from the gunwale from the Molly B to the deck of the barge, and quickly ran to the front door. It was locked. He shook it and it wouldn't open.

"What the hell are you trying to do?" The mate yelled across.

"Call the Coast Guard." Carl yelled. "Where do they keep the key?"

But there was no time for that. The Coast Guard Station was pulling ahead and soon it would be towing the Molly B instead of the other way around.

"Look under the mat." The mate yelled into the wind.

Carl looked down, then up, the key was hanging from a hook on the door frame, swinging back and forth with the rocking of the barge. He yanked it off its nail and stuck it into the door and the door knob twisted and broke it off. But the door popped open.

Behind him the mates on his boat were yelling something but he couldn't hear them over the roar of the engines. But he knew exactly what he was doing. He ran to the window, to the right of the open door and shoved it open as far as it would go, then he ran to the next window opened that and then the next and opened that. Inside of a minute he had opened every window on the ground floor. Now he charged up the stairs to the second floor and in less than a minute had opened every window there. Finally, he went up into the dormer room and opened those windows and then he fell onto a cot, briefly, to rest.

Outside, he could hear, behind the barge, the men whooping and hollering aboard the Molly B. Was it working? He got up and raced down to the third floor where he could feel the full strength of the breeze coming through one side of the building and out the other. Outside, through the wind and fog, he could see the jetties of Montauk

34th Annual Meeting of the American Academy of Neurology showed that in seventy randomly selected cases of SIDS, two thirds had been recently vaccinated; twenty-six percent had died within three days of vaccination.

Heather Whitestone, Miss America 1995, was the first virtually deaf Miss America. She had five percent hearing in one ear. Her deafness resulted from a reaction to a DPT shot when she was five.

Possibly the worst smallpox epidemic in this century occurred in the Philippines in the decade 1911-20. A U.S. program that issued twenty-five million doses to a population of ten million resulted in 170,000 cases of the disease and 75,000 deaths.

In 1987, The Times of London ran a series of articles linking U.S. manufactured smallpox with AIDS. The origins of AIDS have still not been determined but a book published by a British journalist last autumn, The River, made such a powerful case for linking AIDS to World Health Organization vaccination programs in the '50s and '60s that now several scientific bodies have actually begun to investigate whatever surviving doses of vaccines remain from those periods.

Another vaccine, a newly mandated one, for Hepatitis B (which is now given to infants a day after birth), has been mentioned as a possible link to AIDS. The vaccine was first given in trials to mostly homosexual men (seen to be at a risk for hepatitis) in 1978. Intravenous drug users and

"I'm gonna stay here then," Darenberg said. And men whooping and hollering aboard the Molly B. Was it working? He got up and raced down to the third floor where he could feel the full strength of the breeze coming through one side of the building and out the other. Outside, through the wind and fog, he could see the jetties of Montauk Harbor less than half a mile away But he was slowing down. He could tell. And behind him he could see the Molly B gaining every second, getting closer and closer and pulling up to the big barge.

As it approached, Darenberg could hear the V8 engine making some new and frightening sound. It was getting the job done but it was exceeding the limits.

He leaned out the window and velled, "Slow her down, slow her down," and he made a waving motion with his hand. The mate at the wheel, grinning, waved back.

Within a minute, the Molly B had pulled up alongside the barge again.

The wind was howling and the water was choppy. Rains had started and there were lightning bolts. Darenberg cupped his hands to his mouth.

"Are you O.K.? Can you bring her in?" he

The mate grinned again and nodded.

jetties. The Molly B pushed forward, the cables went taught, the V-8 engine screamed and Darenberg thought: maybe I ought to close a few of the windows.

The rest you know. The storm passed without further incident. The Molly B pulled the Coast Guard Station through the jetty and into the > harbor, where a great crowd had gathered. No one had ever seen anything of this size come into Lake Montauk before. And the Coast Guard Station was placed on the shore of Star Island, facing all of the activity in Montauk Harbor, where it has remained until this day.

> Nobody ever had to know of Darenberg's harrowing adventure about bringing that barge into Montauk Harbor, but after all they had been through, he and his two mates saw no point in keeping the story to themselves.

> It had been a harrowing adventure. Darenberg said the adventure had made a man out of him and he decided he would never do anything like that again. Nevertheless, he worked for Davis Brothers for several more years before opening the Marina in Montauk.

which directly faces back to the Montauk Coast Guard Station he had moved. The marina is now run by his son and his grandsons. Carl has retired to Stuart, Florida. But if you happen to go down there and see him and ask him about it, he'll tell you this story as if it were yesterday. • hemophiliacs were urged to take the vaccine also. As were health care workers who ministered to the above population. Like AIDS (and unlike Hepatitis A) Hepatitis B is transmitted through blood (such as sharing needles) and sexual contact. These, of course, are highly unusual activities for newborn infants.

In 1997, The Natural Immunity Information Network quoted an 1985 interview with a health care worker, who said the majority of her profession would not take the vaccine in the 1980s because it came "from the blood of junkies and alcoholics." Tissue from laboratory animals (who are usually immune-compromised) are also used in the vaccine, along with cells from aborted dogs, rhesus monkey kidneys and formaldehyde.

The original trial runs of the Hepatitis B vaccine were in New York, Los Angeles and San Franciso. When AIDS first appeared in these cities, circa 1980 (these cities comprised the vast majority of the first AIDS cases) many researchers theorized it was linked to the vaccine. AIDS was similar to a primate virus used in the vaccine. As of this writing no tests of the orginal vaccine has been undertaken to see if there is a clearcut link to AIDS.

Insurance companies will not insure for certain Acts of God, they will not insure for injury or damages suffered from a nuclear power plant accident, and they will not insure for health damages incurred by vaccines.

In 1986 the U.S. government set up the National Childhood Vaccine Injury Act. From 1988 to 1994, $685.4 million was awarded in claims - an average of $2 million per week.

The Food and Drug Aministration estimates that less than ten percent of adverse vaccine reactions are reported by physicians. In a thirty-nine month period from April, 1990 to November, 1993, 54,072 adverse vaccine reactions were reported to the FDA - 12, 504 were attributed to the DPT vaccine. A total of 471 deaths were reported. If the number of adverse reactions is truly ten times the reported number, this would result in a total of over a half million adverse reactions.

After a generation has been innoculated with the MMR vaccine (measles, mumps, rubella), the incidence of measles in the late teen years and twenties has risen dramatically. The vaccine is causing young adults to come down with measles, making a generally harmless childhood disease into a dangerous adult disease. In 1986 several colleges in the northeast suffered a measles outbreak of 6,000 cases.

The vaccine for chicken pox (varicella virus) is, to quote the manufactuer (Merck and Co, Inc.), "propogated in embryonic guinea pig cell cultures and finally propogated in human diploid cell cultures." These are cells from aborted fetuses. How many people, marching at anti-abortion rallies, protesting at abortion clinics would, if they knew this, still think it wonderful their children have these shots?

The chickenpox vaccine is for a disease considered more of a nuisance than a true threat to health. A 1993 article from The New York Times outlined the debate within the medical community about the advisibility of mandating a vaccine for an illness that is not life threatening. As with the case of the MMR, "Scientists have worried that the immunity granted by the new vaccine may wane over time, so that those who avoid chicken pox in childhood might get it as adults. when it is a more serious disease." Ultimately, the rationale for instituting the vaccine as a mandated one was that when one figured in the time lost from work (throwing in the lost sleep and distress from comforting an uncomfrotable child at night) this made the vaccine cost effective.

A true case of how medicine follows culture. The mandated vaccine program is a cruelty and a stupidity and spirituality must always repond to such double evils by, first, saying it is evil and then avoiding it. But what to do when the authorities say your avoidance is not a true spiritual belief? An authority may disagree with my spiritual belief, but how can it determine my faith's sincerity, depth and application? This is a frightening abridgement of the First Amendment; and it smacks, quite frankly, of a Nazi-Soviet style rule, in which the "experts" decide not only what science is the science we will live (and die) by, but which pronouncements of faith will be accepted.

"We hope you will accept our individual choice, because a system that reduces individual choice, whether the choice be spiritual or intellectual, and asks one to conform to practices that may be abhorrent to them, is in itself an abhoration." Jo-Ann Tiranno

In recent years, Rona Jaffe kicks off the release of every new novel she writes with a party at her Sagaponack home. Her new book, just hitting the shelves and reserving its spot on the New York Times Best Sellers List is called The Road Taken, delving into four generations of women. Her cocktail party brought together friends, mostly from the media and arts. At this party, guests were talking mostly the biz, with the most commonly asked question among these professionals being "So what you up to now?" So going to this kind of party, you'd better be prepared with some good career strides to report, or make some up.

WORLD TEAMTENNIS

World TeamTennis Celebrates 20th Anniversary

In 1962, Billie Jean Moffitt and Larry King originated the concept of World TeamTennis – a format featuring coed teams composed of two men, two women and a coach.

Each match consists of five sets, with one set each of men's singles, women's singles, men's doubles, women's doubles and mixed doubles. The first team to reach five games wins each set. Years later, after Billie Jean Moffitt became world renown Billie Jean King, the TeamTennis professional league was developed and hit the courts in 1981 with four teams playing in California. It expanded nationwide with eight teams a year later.

This season nine teams will compete for the league championship and the King Trophy as the DuPont World TeamTennis Professional league celebrates its 20th anniversary. For the past twenty consecutive years, World TeamTennis has been America's only professional coed team sport and has showcased marque tennis players such as Jimmy Connors, Bjorn Borg, Monica Seles, Martina Navratilova and Lindsay Davenport.

The WTT will hold the 20th anniversary league final at the USTA National Tennis Center on Saturday, August 26, as part of the festivities on Arthur Ashe Kid's Day.

"We're thrilled to celebrate our 20th consecutive season at the site of the U.S. Open," said WTT Director Billie Jean King. "Our partnership with the USTA gives us the opportunity to further promote our joint commitment to growing the sport through the fun of coed team format that is the cornerstone of World TeamTennis.

"Billie Jean King is the premier innovator and pioneer of professional tennis and we are very pleased to provide the U.S. Open stage in support of the TeamTennis concept", stated Arlen Kantarian, chief executive, professional tennis at USTA.

One of the greatest moments in WTT history happened this past spring, when DuPont WTT completed the greatest draft in the twenty year history of the league with a field that spanned three generations of tennis. Tennis legend Martina Navratilova returns for the 10th season in the professional league as a member of the Schenectady County Electrics. Serena Williams agreed to play for the Delaware Smash, while sister Venus Williams jumps on board for the St. Louis Aces. Jim Courier agreed to hit the court with Patrick McEnroe and the New York Hamptons, and Monica Seles signed with the Hartford FoxForce. Mary Joe Fernandez resigned from the Smash and Mary Pierce lands in Schenectady after an early trade.

Fans around the league will also get a glimpse of the future of American tennis as WTT signed the ITF's No. 1 junior player Andy Roddick and former Harvard standouts James and Thomas Blake. Fifteen-year-old phenom Monique Viele will also be playing.

"It's great when you have veterans. It is great when you have youth. Youth brings new energy and excitement and of course, the older players can mentor and help the younger ones on strategy and those different kind of things, and help them to know what to expect on the tour. So it really is a great mix that we have," King said.

A superb player and pro tennis legend, King knows what to expect on the pro tour, as she paved the way for women athletes. In 1971, she became the first woman athlete to earn $100,000 in a single year. She won the Wimbledon title twenty times and the U.S. Open crown nine times. King became the first woman commissioner in professional sports history back in 1984.

One of the goals of WTT is to start adding more top men to the rosters and expand over the next three years from nine to sixteen teams. A concerted effort is being made to get more marquee players on the male side and keep the females there as well.

"We have already upgraded our marquee players this year and though we are a small part of the tennis community, we look to continue to grow the game", Ilana Kloss said. Kloss has been a player, a coach and now serves as the Executive Director for WTT. In 1983, Kloss guided Billie Jean King and the Chicago Fyre to the World TeamTennis championship.

Since its inception, the WTT Professional League has been a pioneering vision in tennis, and its dedication to a fan-friendly environment has led to a number of firsts, including being the first in the sport to utilize roving line judges during matches. WTT has also been the first to place name plates on the backs of jerseys, provide court disc jockeys, on-court coaching, umpires calling the match from an elevated platform at the net, playing let serves and playing sets to five games with a tiebreak at 4-4.

The league launched a new logo to celebrate its 20th consecutive season and has plans to reveal its revamped Web site prior to the opening match this summer. The pro league season runs July 10-30. The WTT League finals, featuring the top teams from both the Eastern and Western conferences, will be held on the Grandstand Court No. 3 at the USTA National Tennis Center on Saturday, August 26th. It will start at 2:30 p.m.

For more information and a list of the franchise teams and roster, go to the WTT web site at www.wtt.com.

Patrick McEnroe Leads The New York Hamptons

It seems as if Patrick McEnroe has been climbing out of the shadows all of his life - first as the younger brother of one of the greatest tennis players in history and later as a doubles player who attempted to carve out a career in the spotlight of the singles draw. Odd, but it appears that now McEnore is making his biggest mark on the sport, by only briefly having to pick up

No longer active on the pro tour, McEnroe has a memorable career behind him and an intriguing one just ahead. He's a radio commentator, a TV color analyst and suddenly owner of the New York Hamptons, the aptly-named entry in World TeamTennis, which is sponsored by Lightpath, a service of Cablevision. "It's interesting being a businessman," McEnroe said recently, with more than a trace of excitement.

If anyone knows the excitement tennis can create, it's McEnroe. He and various partners combined for seventeen career doubles titles, earning him renown during the 1980s and 90s. He and Jim Grabb won the French Open doubles title in 1989, although in keeping with the theme of McEnroe's career the achievement was overshadowed when Michael Chang became the first American in thirty-five years to win the French singles title that year.

But McEnroe persevered, turning his doubles success into a respectable singles career after a disappointing start. He reached both the singles semifinals and the doubles finals at the Australian Open in 1991. Four years later, he reached the quarterfinals of the U.S. Open - his best singles performance in a Grand Slam tournament - to the cheers of the crown in Flushing Meadow, a short lob from McEnroe's home in Oyster

"That was really special because it came in New York", he said. "There were the fans and my friends and a lot of family."

He was ranked as high as No. 28 in the world in singles, claimed one singles title in his career, and might have won another if his opponent in the final of the Chicago Indoor tournament in '91 hadn't been a fierce competitor of some repute named John McEnroe.

"I remember that well,"" Patrick said. "It was the last tournament John ever won and it was as close in ranking as we ever were. His career was winding down and my singles career was just starting to get going. I don't think either one of us really enjoyed it. I know I didn't. I had no desire to beat my brother."

The challenges McEnroe faces these days are different. Besides doing sports commentary for "Imus in the Morning" and work for ESPN and CBS, he has helped bring pro tennis to the Hamptons - specifically, Sportime in the Hamptons in East Quogue. Inheriting the legacy of the New York Apples and the New York Sets of the early WTT days, the New York Hamptons will feature Jim Courier and another player of note Patrick McEnroe. Also competing in WTT in the Hamptons are leading players such as Monica Seles, and the legendary Martina Navratilova.

Each team is comprised of two men and two women. Team matches consist of five sets - one each of men's singles and doubles, women's singles and doubles and mixed doubles. Five games wins a set and a point is awarded for each set won. The league runs from July 10 thru July 30th. The Hamptons home matches will be played on July 13, 14, 15, 26, 28, 29 and 30. "It's really a fun atmosphere," McEnroe said. "It's not like that killer atmosphere in pro tournament. It's designed to be entertaining. It's for the fans, the kids, for families. It's an atmosphere where you don't sit on your hands. Once people see it, its amazing how they get into it. I guarantee you if you come, you'll want to come back." Which is pretty much what McEnroe has been doing his whole life - coming back.

All You Need Now Is A Glass Of Wine

Last week Dan's Papers published an incomplete version of the following recipe, furnished by The Heritage Inn restaurant in Mattituck. We apologize to our readers for any inconvenience.

HERITAGE VEAL ROLLS

Tender cutlets filled with prosciutto, sausage, cheese and herbs (4 servings)

Ingredients

8 thick sliced veal cutlets 1/4 cup chopped prosciutto

1/4 cup chopped Italian sausage

4 tablespoons butter (unsalted)

2 tbs. Extra virgin olive oil

1/4 cup finely chopped shallots

2 Tbs. chopped Italian parsley

1 Tsp. finely chopped garlic

Freshly ground black pepper to taste

1/4 cup grated parmesan

1/4 cup grated mozzarella

1/4 cup flour

1/2 cup dry white wine

1 cup of veal stock (or chicken stock)

Optional salt to taste

Saute shallots, sausage, garlic, in two tablespoons of butter. Add black pepper to taste. Remove this mixture to a mixing bowl (drain excess fat), mix in the chopped prosciuto, parmesan cheese, mozarella cheese and chopped parsley. Mix well together. (salt to taste) Assemble the Veal Rolls

The cutlets should be a minimum of 4" wide and may require flattening.

Put an equal portion of the filling on each cutlet. Roll and secure with a butcher string or toothpicks. Dredge the rolls in flour seasoned with salt and pepper. Add olive oil to a skillet and cook the veal rolis until browned on all sides about 5 minutes.

Remove from the skillet and place in a baking dish in a warm oven at 350 degrees.

In the same skillet add white wine, to deglaze the pan Add veal or chicken stock and cook down to reduce the liquid by half, approximately 3 to 4 minutes. When liquid is reduced, add the remaining two tablespoons of butter. Season with salt and pepper to taste.

Return the veal rolls to the sauce and continue cooking for 3 to 4 minutes over moderate heat until well coated Remove the veal rolls to a warm plate and spoon the sauce over each one.

Two rolls per serving

CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

Did you hear the one about the giant sport utility vehicle that drives into a gas station? It's a full service station, so the driver pokes his head out of the window and tells the attendant to, "Fill her up." The preoccupied driver forgets to shut off the SUV's engine. About a minute into the fill-up, the gas station attendant shouts to the driver, "You better shut down your motor, you're getting ahead of me!" The jokes on those of you who drive these gas-guzzlers that are cluttering the highways and taking up more space per capita than any other mode of people-movers on earth.

Several weeks ago, I was in my little BMW coupe, dead in the water, in the mother of all traffic jams on the Sunrise The horizon was blotted out by a metal curtain of SUV's. My mind flashed on the classic science fiction film, "The Day the Earth Stood Still", in which alien Michael Rennie lands on earth accompanied by a giant, menacing metal robot named Gort. The only way to stop Gort from destroying earth was to shout to him the secret code words, "Gort! Klaatu barada nikto!" I fantasized that perhaps this same command would get rid of all these robot-like SUVs around me; destroying earth, its natural resources and highway space

But who am I to dictate what people should drive? The astounding fact of the matter is that four vehicles, out of every ten sold, are sport utility vehicles. Everybody wants one, no matter what price of gas per gallon. It's an automotive cold war. One has to own a vehicle that is wider and taller than one's neighbors. Has the theme become height makes might?

one has a commanding view of the road. I have to admit that I owned one of the first Range Rovers imported into the US. When driving this Titanic vehicle, many times I felt like shouting from my elevated perch, "I'm king of the world." Even before Leo.

The main appeal of SUVs, besides their macho looks. is that they are very roomy machines that remind me of Mad Max prop movie cars, with "kangaroo" bars front and rear. With the attributes of fourwheel drive, they are unstoppable in the snow and have added safety in the rain. Because they are so desirable, they also have tremendous

Here are some ways to get better gas mileage with any SUV. First, when purchasing one, stick with the smallest engine that is available. Unless you are planning to tow, a small engine is more than adequate. One can assume that the smaller the engine, the better the gas mileage. Another factor is weight. Ask yourself if you really need to be driving a five thousand pound plus vehicle. The lighter the car, the better the gas mileage. Keep your vehicle as light as possible. Get rid of all that useless stuff that has been molding away in the back trunk area.

Slow down. All engines burn substantially more fuel the faster they turn. No jack rabbit starts. Drive as though there's an egg between your foot and the throttle. SUVs do have some positive elements. Sitting up high, , If your car is equipped driving lights, or other added accessories, don't use them. The more electrical load one uses when driving actually hurts gas mileage because it puts an additional strain on the car's alternator, which loads down the motor.

Keep tires properly inflated. You can even add about five pounds more than factory recommendations. The more inflated your tires, the less rolling resistance. When starting your car, warm or cold, drive off immediately. However, in cold weather, take it easy until the engine warms up. Drive with windows closed and use airconditioning. You actually get better gas mileage due to improved aerodynamics. Pick-up trucks also get better gas mileage with their tailgates open or removed due to less wind resistance.

When stopped for a long time, don't sit there with the engine idling. Shut it down. The new Honda hybrid gas-electric car, that gets an EPA rating of 70 miles per gallon, automatically shuts its engine off at red lights. There is a lesson to be learned here.

Today's new cars are equipped with banks of computers that actually keep them in tune for many thousands of miles so the days of the old tune-up are over. However, if your car has more than sixty thousand miles on the odometer, change the fuel filters and spark plugs. Perhaps the most important way to save money at the gas pump is to put the right grade of fuel in your car. If the owner's manual recommends regular fuel, which is 87 octane, that is the only grade you need. Period. Filling up with a higher and more expensive octane fuel wil not help your car's engine in any way. It will not go faster or last longer. Obviously, if you have a high performance motor, it will most likely need a higher octane fuel. Again, refer to the owner's manual.

If you must have an SUV, remember that if you wanna play, you gotta pay. I'll be content to tool along in my economical little sports car, muttering, "Klaatu barada

Cool Advice For Travelers on Hot Days

Whether you are exploring in the Amazon jungle or playing golf in Phoenix, extremely hot weather can present challenges on your vacation.

With all of these sunny days, I decided to research some helpful suggestions on how to stay cool on trips to warm climates.

One research study I found was performed on two sets of American travelers taking a bus tour in Agra, India on a very hot day - 100 degrees.

The travelers on one bus were supplied - and encouraged to drink - plenty of liquids. The travelers on the other bus had liquids only at rest stops. At the end of the day, those in both groups were given simple coordination tests and asked a series of questions. Researchers found that passengers whose fluid intake was somewhat restricted experienced far more headaches and fatigue and made more mistakes on the tests. The results show what many researchers have long believed: you need not be lost in the Sahara to suffer the effects of heat and dehydration. Even slight decreases in your liquid balance can affect your performance and well-being.

Fatigue or lack of sleep can also predispose people to heat-related problems. Those of you who travel know these are common conditions while on a trip. Hours spent sitting in airplane cabins with the humidity near zero can also cause dehydration.

Here are a few suggestions you might follow tp prevent dehydration, according to Karl Neumann, author of the Healthy Traveler:

* Don't wait until you're thirsty to start drinking.

* Try to drink four to six ounces of fluids per hour in hot weather, and much more if you are exerting yourself. * In the Tropics carry bottled water, because local water may be contaminated.

* The best clothing for any hot climate is a hat with a broad brim and a high dome with holes for ventilation, and garments that fit loosely, are light in weight and light-colored, and preferably made with cotton.

* Cut down your intake of proteins and fats, which increase the body's heat production.

* Eat fruits and vegetables and perhaps this would be the best time to blend them into a icy cold smoothie.

Shop'til You Drop.....With Maria Tennariello

Well with the July 4 weekend behind us, things might slow down just a bit. The towns were all buzzing with locals, tourists, and shoppers. Let's see what's going on for next week, so let's shop!

Start the month off with a July "Two For One" haircut by Peter and Dan at Arline's Salon at the Omni in Southampton. Her two new staff members are extending this two for one special so that they can "get to know" their new clients. Arline's is a full service salon with a full service staff always ready, willing and able to serve you. Arline also has a large selection of hair products at very reasonable prices. Call for appointments at 283-7472. And...don't forget Arline has the best cup of coffee in town.

Aesthetics Home Furnishings and Antiques at the Citarella Plaza in Water Mill just keeps getting better and better! They have added table linens to their assortment of fine products and antiques. Another container of European treasures, incredible dark wood pieces from the continent raise the level of Richard's finds another notch of the bar. He really has a knack for finding interesting and unique things that will definitely catch your eye.

At the East Hampton Guild Hall Gift Shop Treasures in connection with their American Impressionism Treasures from the Smithsonian Museum Exhibit you'll find fascinating items such as posters, and soft covered books, mousepads and puzzles. The "Gift Shop" is really bursting with unusual and fanciful gifts for everyone and for every occasion.

Our Glass blown, fused & stained glass 136 Main Street Amagansett, N4

(Next to One Stop Pet Shop)

For a great selection of Dolls, Gifts And Then Some. check out the Standard Doll Supply House in East Hampton for dolls, accessories, supplies and...then some. Located on North Main Street, look for the huge clearance sale of not only dolls, but also home furniture. Call for information, 329-4646.

Hot off the press, if you're in East Hampton stop in at Georgina on Main Street on Saturday and Sunday, July 8, and 9, from 4 to 8 p.m. and meet designer Randolph Duke and preview his Fall 2000 Evening Collection. Get familiar with this store, you will probably be shopping there on a weekly basis.

Did you know that July is Tanzanite month for Gems of the Past? With over 120 pieces of tanzanite jewelry ranging from $150 to $150,000. Gems of the Past is your source for this popular and beautiful blue-purple stone with the deeper blue stones being the finest. Available here are the tanzanite that rivals the color of the finest blue sapphires. Stop by and learn the proper care and handling of tanzanite and all other gemstones from graduate gemologist and owner, Karen J. Adler. Born in July? Karen has many unique pieces of ruby jewelry for you July babe's. Stop in to see Gems of the Past, today and tomorrow.

I found a great store in East Hampton on Montauk Highway, near the Red Horse Market called, The Blue Frog. It's a shop all about pets and pet products. This is a Hampton high end pet store with exotic birds, ferrets and rabbits to name a few. Pet beds are unique and a sure way to pamper and spoil your lovable little friends. I bought one for Tino and he never wants to get out of bed in the morning, even with the alarm clock going off in his ear. Look for the knitted and sturdy (but soft) collars and leashes in bright colors like red, electric blue, yellow and more. I loved the soft leather leashes and collars with decorative studs attached to them. Call 324-4909 for information. Believe me, you will get extra hugs and kisses from your furry best friend

The latest trend to hit the Hamptons are beautiful, hand-held Mariposa Fans in luscious silks and gossamer organza's. Designed by former Halston protégé, Chris Royer, to accessorize this season's fashions, these lovely "works of art" conveniently tuck into a pocket or purse. There is even a Mariposa "Aromatherapy" collection that makes it possible to "carry" and "create" a personal environment of energy, relaxation, and clarity and a personal favorite, balance. Available at Daryl Westfall in East Hampton, Touche in Southampton, D.J. Hart in Sag Harbor and Eleanor in Westhampton, each Mariposa Fan comes with a protective purse pouch. For more information call Susan Lupien 800-317-1771.

Well, time to run home and chart my course for next week's shopping. Can't wait!

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Shopping!

LOOKING FOR THAT SPECIAL SOMETHING, TRYING TO FIND THAT PERFECT PRESENT, OR JUST IN SEARCH OF THE BEST DEALS ON THE EAST END – SEND MARIA A FAX AT 537-3330 OR EMAIL YOUR QUESTIONS TO HER AT SHOPTIL@HAMPTONS.COM

Q. We recently purchased a large home on a large piece of property. I haven't the time or the inclination to tie myself down with all the day to day trivialities that go along with home ownership. Do you know anyone that can help, help, help me with this dilemma?

A. I have helped with this dilemma before and I recommend Estate Property Management, "Professional Management of Fine Homes and Estates," located in Amagansett. They serve the entire Hamptons community and has over twelve years experience managing some of the finest properties in the Hamptons. They are a full service management company that covers all of your property needs. Call them at 631-329-3031 or visit their website at www.estatepropertymanagement.com. —MT

"FRANK O'HARA AND AMERICAN ART" AT THE PARRISH

Despite Larry Rivers' nude figure of Frank O'Hara that first greets the visitor, the current exhibit at the Parrish Museum is pretty tame (expecially O'Hara and Rivers' lovely lithographs)— unlike the often "wild" artists and poets which the show celebrates. Perhaps that's why the nude is there, reminding us that these creative people were an unconventional lot, doing shocking things during the 1950s and 60s.

"Shocking" aside, our perception is that here was a group of artists who were just having "fun." If their love of life led to aesthetic experimentation, so be it. (This is not to infer that these particular people were not serious about their art.)

The word "group" is key: their joie-de-vie experimentation was not merely reserved for individual endeavors but resulted in collaboration (of all kinds) as well. (Similar collaborations among filmmakers were taking place with the French New Wave, but that cinematic. including Mr. Rivers' overacting.

movement based on freedom and discovery had more lasting significance in this critic's view.)

Another more relevant collaboration involved Rudy Burckhardt, a photographer/filmmaker who made movies about his friends, many of whom are included in the Parrish show. While he was known for portraits featuring artists at work, Mr. Burckhardt's dramatic narrative (Mounting Tension) with Mr. Rivers and Jane Freilicher was simply a riot, capturing the free-flowing spirit of the artists and their times. The spoof made fun of poor Mr. Rivers' attempts to seduce any woman he met. The film also

Frank O'Hara

Mr. Burckhardt's documentaries also conveyed the spirit of freedom, imbuing the camera's ability to record real events/objects. It was primarily through editing that the filmmaker juxtaposed huge skyscrapers with dancers in a rehearsal studio: stasis vs. movement; public vs. private; achievement vs. struggle.

This same struggle is not evident in the Parrish show or at another current exhibit at New York University's Grey Art Gallery, "Rudy Burckhardt and Friends." No matter. The artists all had great fun while it lasted.

"Frank O'Hara and American Art" will be on view at Southampton's Parrish Museum until July 30; the current show at the Grey Art Gallery (100 Washington Square East) will laughed at his paintings, but it was all in good fun, be on view until July 15.

Honoring the Artist: Giancarlo Impiglia

of a "retrospective" means the featuring of a body of conceptual art is based on sensationalism and shock work that not only spans several years value where it loses its connection but is also significant. While painter Giancarlo Impiglia's current retrospective in Pueblo, Colorado, certainly qualifies on these two counts, it suggests other meanings as well: the consistent commitment to both classical craftsmanship and contemporary concerns.

A conversation with the artist himself reinforces what the retrospective denotes. Mr. Impiglia's passion for classical tradition is evident in his energy and enthusiasm; his acknowledgement of the human condition, while not always positive, is genuinely forthright and insightful. This is not to infer that the artist has given up on society, however. He simply recognizes its contradictions when he notes, "Here we have discovered the mysteries of DNA, but there are such absurdities dealing with political issues in the world, like tortures and the war in Kosovo. Another absurdity is that a lot of museums are filled with garbage.

"Filled with garbage?" Did Mr. Impiglia really mean that? You bet he did. But, fortunately for us, he expresses

To most people involved in the art scene, the idea such strong beliefs in a context, explaining that much value where it loses its connection with art history. In a word, Mr. Impiglia believes conceptual art lets us forget what is beautiful.

"I saw a video piece in London, " he notes quickly as an example. "It explored the interior of someone's stomach. If that's art, then my gastrologist is a great artist." Mr. Impiglia laughs goodnaturedly at the notion.

He continues, "This kind of art leaves us nothing at the end. I want to deal with cultural and educational issues which will hopefully last. Art is now a business-it's run like show business, like Broadway."

Even if one is a conceptual art lover, it's hard to argue against the points Mr. Impiglia has made, especially with the idea that art is a business. It's also difficult to imagine that a performance piece which features a man covering himself with fish skins will be remembered years from Accordingly, an artist does not have to invent new technologies or materials (like fish skins) when expressing himself. If one is a good artist, he has all he needs to create. "I don't need new technology," Mr. Impiglia explains. "I'm using everything I have. In fact, conceptual artists aren't inventing anything new either. They still need space and an environment. What they're lacking is craftsmanship.

We can attest to the fact that Mr. Impiglia is certainly a craftsman, and a painstakingly one at that, judging from his painting on this week's cover which he created in the 1970s. It's also clear from his work generally that he's still going strong, pursuing art that conveys substantial values to serve society.

-Marion Wolberg Weiss

Mr. Impiglia's work will be on view in the show, "3D," at Bridgehampton's Elaine Benson Gallery from July

East Hampton (631)329-8580

The crowds came for picnics, beaches and fireworks last week, but this week is brimming over with classical and pop music, theater, dance, films, speakers and benefits, benefits, benefits. Some of the highlights: Music Festival of the Hamptons begins; Andrea Marcovicci sings in East Hampton; comedian Robert Klein is at Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center (Saturday) and then Ray Charles comes in; Playwrights Theatre of East Hampton opens; Trisha Brown and Dance Company perform in Southampton. There's a tour of historic Sag Harbor homes on Friday, and a special exhibit on "Black Whalers: Their Tales, Courage and Conquests" opens at the Sag Harbor Whaling Museum with a benefit reception on Friday evening. Longhouse Reserve, East Hampton, is featuring Persian foods, music, dance, and poetry on Saturday evening. For the sportsminded, the East End Open tennis tournament for Hospice (amateur) is Saturday at Westhampton Tennis & Sport, while the New York State Claycourt Championships (a qualifying tournament for the U.S. Open) begin on Saturday at the East Hampton Indoor/Outdoor club (through July 16; free admission).

And now to some of the benefits on Saturday, July 8: Chefs & Champagne (James Beard Foundation); Summer Gala Benefit Bash (Bay Street Theatre); Grand Opening Concert/Dinner (Music Festival of the Hamptons); Hot Latin Nights (The Retreat); Musical Garden Party (Pianofest). For details on events mentioned above, and several more, read on:

THEATER

Playwrights Theatre of East Hampton, which presents staged readings of new plays, begins its eighth season on Friday and Saturday with Born to be Queen by Marsha Lee Sheiness. This is the true tale of Eleanor of Aquitaine who, at a young age, maneuvered her way through wars and religious strife to become queen. The play features Gwendolyn Lewis and is directed by Robert Kalfin. There is a brief discussion and then refreshments following the performance. The show goes on at 9 p.m. at LTV Studios,

Johnny Maestro and The Brooklyn Bridge at Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center

75 Industrial Rd. (off Daniels Hole Rd. before East Hampton Airport). Reservations are requested; for tickets ($15), call Pazer Productions at (631) 329-9909.

This is the last weekend to see Bay Street Theatre's original production of Jon Robin Baitz's adaptation of the Henrik Ibsen classic drama Hedda Gabler. The well-acted play stars Kate Burton, Michael Emerson and Harris Yulin. Performances are Wednesday through Sunday. To reserve a seat at the Sag Harbor theater, call the box office at (631) 725-9500 (11 a.m. until 6 p.m.).

Comedian/actor Robert Klein is at Westhampton Beach Performing Arts Center on Saturday, 8:30 p.m. Young comedian Scott Blakeman, a favorite at Caroline's Comedy Club, will open for Klein (tickets, 631-288-1500). At Montauk Theatre Productions, Melba LaRose Jr. brings her new show, A Builder of Dreams, to the 6 Elmwood St. stage July 5-8. The story follows one woman's life from the beginning of the 20th century through World War II and is based on Ms. LaRose's grandmother. For tickets ($15), call MTP at 631-668-5656.

East Hampton's Guild Hall begins its "Off Broadway at the John Drew Theater" series on Monday, July 10, with the Blue Heron Theater Company's staged reading of Fanny and Walt. The play by Jewel Seehaur-Fisher celebrates the relationship of a young, still-unknown Walt Whitman and a wealthy, divorced newspaper columnist, Fanny Fern. The program starts at 7 p.m. and tickets ($12-$15) are available at the door.. If you're in the mood for slapstick comedy, Spindletop Productions, a local troupe, performs Sam Bobrick's Hamlet II, a spoof of Shakespeare's melancholy Dane, as a dinner/theater package on Sunday and Monday evenings at Rocco's Restaurant, 21 West Water Street, Sag Harbor. Dinner is served at 7 p.m. and the play begins at 8 p.m.; the tab for both is $39.95. Reservations are recommended; call (631) 725-0358.

LETHAL FIREWORKS THE 4TH

Hold it! Wait jus' a second, there! I think this good looking, youthful critic has experienced a senior moment...or two! Am I truly failing? Or, are THE PATRIOT and GLADIATOR substantially the same movie? There's this story . . . A decent man must fight a war. He hates war but, does it extremely well. He loves a family and farm life and he does that extremely well, too. But, because it is an extremely hard and cruel world out there, both family and farm are decimated and he must turn again to violence and, I mean VIOLENCE! to return to what is left of his gentle, loving life. Mel Gibson is The Patriot . we know that because at the end of the film he dashingly strides, runs and rides waving the stars and stripes of the 1776 war of the Colonies, which (seriously, folks) got my pride elated. But, until then he is a gladiator entertaining us, the public, with fights to the death. Vengeance and a quite snappish temper are his and they can get him to chopping up a British soldier into bloody little, messy pieces and leaving him covered with, (and dripping with) that grisly goop. And, to be honest, he did it, with his little hatchet (this pleased Washington, I'm sure) . . . the same little tomahawk that he used to cut up live, ornery enemies in the French and Indian War. But hold, on, again! Mel, the extraordinary actor that he is, transforms this overly manipulative action movie into a rousing empathetic pleaser. He manages to turn the movie around as deftly as his character, Benjamin Martin, turns around the Revolutionary War. THE BRITISH ARE GOING

Billed as an "Epic" . . . it IS 158 minutes long and has rows and rows of soldiers and the Militia . . . The PATRIOTS 'ragged band. The film adds gun powder to the NRA's fuming keg with its theme and its' hero giving rifles to his two tiny sons who, without explanation (for a pacifist farmer family), load and fire with deadly precision and manage to kill, with Dad's help, twenty or so British soldiers without sustaining a scratch. Once more, however, Mr. Gibson fills the breeches of what essentially is a hollow movie. His impressively sincere relationship with his seven movie children must bear a similarity to his own large family. However, his Patriot, Ben Martin, is made to change his stance every ten minutes, which would have made them delinquents today. Thomas Jefferson hadn't invented waffles as yet, but, waffling is this movies' manner. It's this, it's that, it's for this, then that. Almost everyone changes their minds a few times except for that villain, the British Colonel, played to the hilt (in colonist's backs) by Jason Isaacs, and the Patriot's sister-in-law, who's been taking care of his children . . . she just loves Ben more and he hardly notices. more

A LESSON FOR U.S. ALL:

Take for instance, its educational value. Young people will hear that great slogan, "No taxation without representation!", which they all know was devised by Doyle, Dane and Bernbach. They will come to have affection for the old muskets and those clumsy cannons. They also might want to go back to Mr. Gibson's own Brave Heart', a really keen film, or, for that matter, Gladiator, which compelled with a poetic quality. In well-defined but, quite condensed form it performed, suggestively, a strong story of mankind's affinity with violence. In other words, a less show-busy way, "But", as Sidney Skolsky used to say, "don't get me wrong. I love Hollywood!"

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer, writer and director of award-winning films for ABC, NBC, PBS and European feature films. He has judged the major motion picture and TV award competitions. ## Dot-Com Caters to Parents and Children

By Rachel Sokol

Tara Hendricks, 27, knows how difficult traveling with young children can be. As the mother of two-year old Ryen, and one-year-old Oliver, she knows first-hand how hard it can be lugging strollers and car-seats to accommodate baby needs. During a February trip to Florida, Hendricks rented baby equipment from a toddler-rental service in Sarasota, which she found on the web. Arriving back in Long Island, she found that no company in the Long Island area provided the same services. So, she decided to make traveling with children a little easier by starting her own business via the web called Travelbabies.com, servicing Long Island, Fire Island, the Hamptons, and even Manhattan.

Travelbabies.com rents everything for baby needs (and mommy's needs) from full-sized cribs, car seats and strollers, to red wagons and safety gates, with photos of each item on the site. The Travelbabies.com site also allows viewers to click on the photos for a close-up view of the items for rent. Orders can be placed over the phone or through the website, and are always confirmed before delivery. Weekly, monthly and additional day charges are priced accordingly on the site. Hendricks runs the company from her Bay Shore, N.Y. home, and the rental equipment is stored in Hauppauge. For customer convenience, Travelbabies.com delivers and picks up the ordersin the morning, to avoid traffic, but orders to Fire Island are shipped by freight boat. All of the equipment provided by Travelbabies is new. Hendricks has the latest products-and even provides linens for the cribs. Everything she rents is sanitized and insured. She wants her customers to feel comfortable when renting equipment from Travelbabies.com. "I treat my customers like my own children. I want what is best for them," said Hendricks. "If the parents are not happy on vacation, than the children are not happy." Payment can be with cash, check, Visa or Mastercard.

"All the items are easy to assemble, excellent and safe," Hendricks said. She is often getting new shipments of inventory, directly from the manufacturers. The service is especially convenient during holidays, when families and friends come to Long Island. Hendricks is pleased with the success of Travelbabies.com, and has had customers from all over the U.S. "Everyone has been so nice, and I am meeting so many different people." She recently has had orders from hotels for rental equipment. For the future, she may add new products to the site and appreciates consumer feedback. She made a few changes on the site at a customer's suggestion. All inventory provided by Travelbabies.com meets the Consumer Product Safety Requirements (CPSR) and is certified by the Juvenile Products Manufacturers through cocktails and a dinner dance featuring Grammy Award-winners Earl Young and The Trammps. Tickets for the entire day are $175 for spectators and $200 for tournament players; call 631-288-8400. Raindate is Sunday.

Tito Puente's All Stars, the "King of Salsa's" band, will be playing in tribute to their leader on Saturday night at "Hot Latin Nights," a dinner dance for The Retreat, the East End's shelter for victims of domestic abuse. Some Sopranos cast members are expected (since Marcy Gandolfini is one of the evening's co-chairs), perhaps to guard the designer jewelry to be auctioned. The setting is Bob Hurst's home in Sagaponack. Tickets start at $300; call 631-329-5480.

In a more sedate musical setting, Pianofest is holding a musical garden party from 5 to 7:30 p.m. on Saturday amid Robert Dash's beautiful Madoo Conservancy gardens in Sagaponack. There will be cocktails, hors d'oeuvres and a concert by some of Pianofest's international artists. Admission is a $50 donation. Call 631-329-9115 for information.

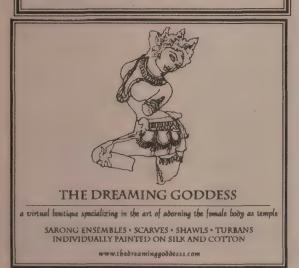

Bay Street Theatre takes over Sag Harbor's Long Wharf on Saturday right for its "Summer Gala Benefit Bash." The evening begins with cocktails and a silent auction followed by dinner from Robbins Wolfe and dancing to Kit McClure's Big Band. The highlight of the event is the live "Fantasy" auction with Julie Andrews, Alec Baldwin and Chevy Chase sharing the auctioneer duties. Tickets start at $250; call 631-725-0818.

With fine cuisine a staple of Hamptons' life, Manhattan's James Beard Foundation has a big "Chefs & Champagne" fund-raiser here in the summer. This year's edition honors Ariane and Michael Batterbury, the founding editors of Food & Wine magazine. Chefs from New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Honolulu and the Hamptons will provide signature dishes to complement the champagnes being poured at Wolffer Estate/Sagpond Vineyards from 5 to 8 p.m. on Saturday. Tickets are $125 for foundation members, $150 for guests; call 212-627-

silvia lehrer's cooking column

Plump sea scallops, sweet and plentiful, are currently being harvested in local waters. This is cause for celebration as the National Marine Fisheries Department recently opened up areas that were formerly closed for conservation measures.

According to Jim Cornesi of Cor-J Seafood in Hampton Bays our local scallops are equal in sweetness to the "Diver" scallops, the popular but expensive restaurant offering; that are harvested off the coast of Maine from ocean shelves.

Scallops are measured by weight in much the same way as shrimp. Size small weigh in about 30-35 to the pound and size large about 12-15 to the pound. Prices run the gamut from $10 to $12.95 per pound for small and 13.95 to $18.95 per pound for large in seafood shops from Hampton Bays to Montauk.

Creatively, Chef/owner Christian Mir of the Stone Creek Inn, drew on his French influence for scallops Provencal at his restaurant. A deliciously fragrant dish with garlic, parsley and tomatoes in a Pastis and white wine glaze. Some years ago I enjoyed sea scallops with tomato leek compote at the famous Troigros Brothers restaurant in Roanne, France. This led to my interpretation below.

Or, for a simple summer lunch or light dinner, enjoy our local sea scallops and prepare a colorful and refreshing salad on a bed of fresh spinach and orange slices with citrus vinaigrette.

CHRISTIAN MIR'S SCALLOPS PROVENCAL

Pastis, the most popular drink in the South of France, subtly flavors Christian Mir's inspired scallops Provencal. Have all the ingredients in readiness as the entire dish is cooked within a few minutes. Serves 4 as appetizer

- 1 pound sea scallops, tough side muscle removed Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
- 2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 cup, halved tiny heirloom pear tomatoes
- 2 cloves garlic, minced
- 2-3 tablespoons, finely chopped
- 2 tablespoons dry white wine
- 2 tablespoons unsalted butter, cut into small pieces. (optional)
- 1. Remove small tough muscle from side of scallops and discard. Rinse and pat dry. Heat oil in a large non-stick skillet and put in the scallops. Sear scallops over high heat, browning them slightly, about 30-40 seconds on each side. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Transfer scallops to a side dish. Add tomatoes, garlic and parsley to the skillet the scallops cooked in and saute for 10-20 seconds.

2. Pour in Pastis and wine to deglaze drippings in bottom of skillet; bring to the edge of a boil. Reduce heat then return scallops to the sauce and toss to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Swirl in butter, bit by bit, if using, to enrich and thicken the sauce slightly. Serve immediately.

SEA SCALLOPS WITH TOMATO VINEGAR COMPOTE

The Troigros Brothers restaurant in Roanne, France is where I first tasted this adaptation of a memorable dish. It was the summer of 1975. Serves 4-6 as appetizer

1 1/2 pound sea scallops, tough side muscle removed Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper

Compote

1/4 cup extra-virgin olive oil 2 leeks, trimmed, well rinsed, soaked and thinly sliced 2-3 cloves garlic, finely chopped 3/4 cup dry white wine

3 tablespoons tarragon or white wine vinegar 4-5 medium, ripe tomatoes, peeled, seeded and chopped 1 tablespoon coarsely chopped fresh tarragon leaves Coarse kosher salt and freshly ground pepper Fresh parsley or tarragon sprigs for garnish (optional)

- 1. Remove small tough muscle from side of scallops and discard. Rinse quickly and pat dry with paper towel. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and set aside.
- 2. Warm 2 tablespoons oil in a saucepan, add leeks and saute, stirring until tender then add garlic and saute for a few seconds longer. Add wine, raise heat and bring to a boil. Reduce heat to medium and simmer until wine is reduced by half. Add vinegar and cook for 2-3 minutes longer. Add tomatoes sprinkle lightly with salt and pepper and simmer for 12-15 minutes. Add fresh tarragon and stir to mix. Taste to adjust seasoning if necessary. Keep warm.
- 3. Heat remaining 2 tablespoons oil in a non-stick skillet and add the scallops. Sear over high heat, stirring scallops about 30-40 seconds on each side, being careful not to overcook them. Ladle compote in center of 6 salad-size plates and arrange scallops equally over the sauce. Garnish with fresh sprigs of parsley or tarragon, if desired.

To Prepare Ahead: Follow steps 1 and 2 up to 2 days ahead. Refrigerate in suitable container. Bring sauce to room temperature before reheating and complete

SEA SCALLOP SALAD WITH CITRUS VINAIGRETTE

A colorful and refreshing salad for a summer lunch Serves 4-6

1 pound sea scallops, tough muscle removed 1/2 pound fresh spinach leaves, heavy stems removed 2 navel oranges

Citrus Vinaigrette

1 clove garlic, minced 1/4 cup orange juice

1 - 1 1/2 tablespoons lime juice

1 teaspoon grainy Dijon mustard

2 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil Dash cayenne

1. Rinse scallops and place in a steamer over simmering water. Cover pan and steam for 1 1/2 -2 minutes. Remove from heat.

- 2. Wash spinach leaves in a salad spinner and wrap in paper towels to absorb excess moisture. Using a sharp vegetable peeler, remove 1-1 1/2 inch long strips of peel from oranges, removing only the orange colored zest. If necessary use a sharp knife to remove white pith from strips. Cut strips into julienne and blanch in boiling water for 30 seconds. Drain, dry and set aside. Cut the navels into thin slices and set aside.
- 3. Prepare vinaigrette: Place garlic, mustard and juice in a bowl and stir to mix. Slowly whisk in oil and season with cavenne.
- 4. Divide spinach leaves on 4-6 plates and overlap equal amount of orange slices on the greens. Center the scallops equally over the orange slices and drizzle some of the dressing over each plate. Randomly scatter the blanched julienne over each plate and serve.

TOP EAST END CHEFS AT "CHEFS & CHAM-PAGNE" Chef Colin Ambrose of Estia (Amagansett) and Estia's Little Kitchen (Sag Harbor) and Chefs James Carpenter and Kevin Penner of Della Femina (East Hampton and NYC) will be among the featured chefs at The James Beard Foundation's annual summer gala "Chefs & Champagne." The lavish tasting party features Taittinger champagne and culinary offerings from a select group of about twenty-five fine chefs from New York City and beyond. Other famed chefs slated to participate include Rocco DiSpirito (Union Pacific), Alfred Portale (Gotham Bar & Grill), and Roy Yamaguchi (Roy's). The event will take place on Saturday, July 8 at the Wölffer Estate in Sagaponack. Tickets are $125 for Foundation members and $150 for non-members and may be reserved by calling (212) 627-2308.

WINE DINNER AT THE PLAZA CAFÉ On Sunday, July 30th at 7 p.m., chef/owner Douglas Gulija of The Plaza Cafe (283-9323) in Southampton will host a special vintner dinner showcasing the artistry of the world renowned wine makers of Grgich Hills Cellar. For the special dinner, Violet Grgich (pronounced Gur-gitch) and Chef Gulija have planned a six-course dinner that will feature wine pairings at each course. The selected wines were produced by Grgich installations in California and Croatia. Croatia is the ancestral home of both chef

Gulija and Ms. Grgich, both of whom are first generation Americans. The cost of the special dinner is $125 per person plus tax and gratuity.

JULY PICNIC BASKETS AT THE RED HORSE MARKET Jerry & David's Red Horse Market (329-6655) is offering two special summer picnic baskets through the month of July. The baskets feature the following items: (Basket One, $48): Blue corn tortilla chips, Flamin pineapple salsa, desert pepper salsa, 4-pk Irish stout beer. (Basket Two, $48): One dozen cooked shrimp, cocktail sauce, sparkling juice, baguette and brie. Both baskets come with plastic utensils and napkins.

RICCARDO,S SEAFOOD HOUSE NOW SERVING LUNCH AND BRUNCH In addition to nightly dinner service, Riccardo's Seafood House (324-0000) now serves lunch Monday? Friday, from noon to 3 p.m. and brunch on weekends from noon - 3 p.m. The brunch menu includes choices like huevos rancheros with rice and beans, Spanish omelette and fruit salad. The regular lunch menu will also be available during weekend

at Babette's

BABETTE'S SHUNS GENETICALLY MODIFIED FOODS The owners of Babette's Restaurant (329-5377) are taking a stand against genetically modified foods. Owner Barbara Layton and Executive Chef/owner Daniel Van Der Beek are concerned about the introduction of genetically modified organisms (GMOs) into the environment and food chain and wish to avoid serving such foods to their customers. According to Layton, "We can't do this alone. We invite our restaurant friends to join us in bringing attention to this urgent issue." For more information and petitions, call Barbara Layton

BEDELL WINES OFFERED AT ALAIN DUCASSE Manhattan's newest upscale restaurant Alain Ducasse (opened recently by the celebrated French chef) is surely one of the most expensive and exclusive city restaurants, with average dinners running $160 or more per person. As a barometer of how far North Fork wines have come, Bedell's 1996 Merlot is the only New York State red wine on the list and one of only eleven wines from the United States offered in the "red" category. Bedell Cellar's 1996 Reserve Chardonnay is also offered and is one of thirteen white wines listed. Both Ducasse's restaurants in Paris and Monaco have earned the highest rating of three stars from the Michelin Guide.

Dining IN THE HAMPTONS

The great French writer Moliere wrote, "One should eat to live and not live to eat." I'm sure however, had the Farmhouse been in operation in 17th century France, that statement would have been reversed. Fred and Susan Lieberman, the Farmhouse owners, are perfectionists and that pervades every facet of this restaurant. They have a new chef, Frederic Kieffer, who has raised the culinary level at the Farmhouse two notches. The food is exquisite. Susan and Fred are very proud of where they've brought their restaurant. After all, this is only their fourth summer in the business. I predict the Farmhouse will become a mecca for the East End's more exacting gastronomes. The food is that good.

My first reaction entering The Farmhouse on a recent Thursday evening was "this place is jumping." The word definitely is out. Our charming hostess Mary seated us. The moment we were seated, the well-trained staff at the Farmhouse took over. Michael stopped by, ever attentive, surveying the room, making sure everyone was taken care of. Attention to detail is what sets this restaurant apart. Our basket of sourdough rolls appeared and our lovely waitress Devon brought our cocktails. In addition to a full bar, the Farmhouse has a selection of exotic martinis. We started with watermelon martinis and they certainly hit the spot! We looked at the wine list and chose a bottle of local wine to accompany our dinner. The Farmhouse has an extensive and well thought out wine list. Something for everyone.

The appetizers arrived. My guests and I decided to share, thus affording us a taste of and opinion on everything. We selected the chilled sweet-corn chowder with green pea cream, fresh crabmeat and chopped bacon. This was a soup prepared by someone who wants to captivate you. The creamy goodness of the soup combined with the subtle flavor of the fresh crab meat was superb. A dish, we all agreed, we would have again. The Farmhouse bistro salad with blue cheese, grilled pear, walnuts, sundried cranberries and a balsamic dressing was straightforward, relying on good ingredients. It was an excellent choice for our salad. The whole fresh Maine lobster salad with crispy vegetables and citrus dressing was as pretty as a birthday present. Every drop of flavor was coaxed from the shelled lobster and combined with the sublime flavor of citrus dressing. A heavenly appetizer! Sesame crusted tuna sashimi (medium rare) avoçado, mache greens with citrus dressing was exquisite. Rare tuna is great on its own, it doesn't need an accompaniment, but the avocado, greens and dressing were a perfect complement to the velvety goodness of the tuna. Last of the appetizers, but certainly not least, was the pan seared Blue-Claw crab cake with mango cucumber salsa. I loved it. The crab cake was all crab with wonderfully subtle seasonings that complemented the pure, good taste of the crab. The appetizers were all great. Dishes I'd order again and best of all priced just right. They ranged in price from $7 to a high of $16 for the lobster salad.

The hardest part of eating at the Farmhouse is trying to pace yourself. The food is incredible and you want it all. Bourbon "Flambee" lobster (1.5 lbs) with saffroned fettuccine and lobster sauce was delicious and captivated us with the intensity of its flavors. A wonderful choice! One of my guests chose the New York strip steak béarnaise with pommes frittes. It was one heck of a steak. Charred on the outside, rare on the inside. Exactly as ordered. The meat was tender, the sauce great, and the fries...What can I say? No one makes fries the way the French do. Pan seared jumbo sea scallops, crème fraiche polenta, wild mushrooms with red wine reductions. The scallops lived up to their name. They were plump and delicious. Even if you've never had sea scallops, this is a dish that's so good, it's worth trying. The entrees at the Farmhouse are superb and priced accordingly. They start at $22 and go up to $30. I've been in many restaurants out here that charge much more and don't have the quality of food that the Farmhouse has. This is an exceptional restaurant.

Desserts...what can I say. We were all full, but—with a French Chef why not. Almond blanc manger with fresh raspberries. Light as air and extraordinarily delicious. A definite dessert lovers choice. Poire Belle Helene with vanilla ice-cream, hot chocolate sauce and toasted almonds translates to a poached pear that was magical. We all marveled at this dessert. Banana

Baklava with rum raisin ice cream and chocolate sauce was different and very delicious. I've saved the best for last: An exotic floating island with mango, kiwi, pineapple, raspberry and passion fruit coulis. It was delicious. The desserts were as good as everything else on the menu

Food at the Farmhouse consistently merits superlatives. The menu takes on a new life as prepared by Chef Frederic Kieffer. His tremendous talent was apparent in every dish that left the Farmhouse kitchen. The appetizers and entrees were American/French Bistro cooking in its purest form. The presentation was exquisite. Each one worthy of a "Gourmet" magazine cover. His desserts are seductive. True feasts for the eye and the palate. Chef Kieffer is from the gastronomic capitol of the world, Paris. He spent three years working at Le Taillevent, one of France's greatest restaurants and more recently at "Windows on the World." Probably the best background of any chef on the East End of Long Island. Impressive as his credentials are, the food he turns out at The Farmhouse is even more so.

The Farmhouse opened in 1997 and has consistently been one of the top restaurants in East Hampton. They were voted, "Best Restaurant in the Hamptons," three years in a row by the readers of Dan's Papers. Now with their "dream chef" Frederic Kieffer at the helm, there's no telling how many more accolades this restaurant will amass. The good news is that Fred and Susan Lieberman's prices are still affordable. The Prix Fixe dinner is the greatest buy in the Hamptons. You get three courses: soup or salad, two choices for the entrée and two choices for dessert all for $24. If you want an accompanying bottle of wine, the price is $30. You can't beat it! The Prix Fixe is served all night, every night, except Saturdays. You can get the Prix Fixe on Saturdays up until seven pm. Large parties are easily accommodated at the spacious restaurantwhich features 7 dining rooms-all with a unique décor. My recommendation is to try this superb restaurant. Dining at the Farmhouse is to know culinary bliss. For reservations call 631-324-8585.

NY Farms!, a coalition of agriculture, food, and community organizations promoting farming and the protection of farmland in New York State, coordinates a special contest each year. The Long Island Fall Harvest Festival will be co-sponsoring a photo contest with NY Farms! called "Taste, Face & Place of NY Farms! This is the first time that Long Island will be participating. Winning entries will be announced and displayed at the 18th Annual Long Island Fall Harvest Festival on Sunday, September 17th, at the Eastern Campus of Suffolk County Community College. First Prize winners will compete for prizes and exhibition at the 2001 New

North Fork 298-1350

York State Fair.

As the title suggests, the categories are: Taste showing Long Island farm products, both fresh and enhanced, from fresh fruit to pies, cider and wine; Face - showing who grows and produces L.I. products; and Place - showing where L.I. farm products are grown and sold - from fields and vineyards to farmstands and green markets. It is open to both professional and amateur photographers and there are two age groups - ages 16 and younger, and adults. There will also be prizes for the First Prize winner in each of the six

This is a great opportunity to get out there and get some recognition for your photographic talents, as well as for us to increase our file of agricultural photos. Winning photos will show a strong image of farms and food sources and will give viewers a distinct understanding and appreciation for where our food comes from and how vital our farms are to the quality of life on Long Island and to all of New York State. Judges will be looking to see if the Taste photos say 'aah, delicious', if the Face photos connect the viewer with the farmers and growers of our food, and if the Place photos give a vivid impression of the land, the working landscape, rural community and share a sense of place that gives an identity to the sources of our food.

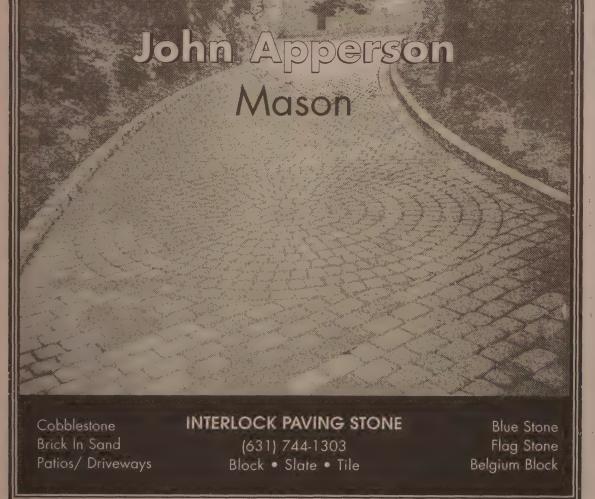

The Fall Harvest Festival at the college is the perfect venue for presenting the winning photos. As many of you are aware, Long Island Farm Bureau sponsors this popular event, along with the college and Cornell Cooperative Extension of Suffolk County. For only a dollar admission, you can enjoy, crafts, exhibits, music, a farmers market, dancing and free parking. Of course, there are always the excellent food and wines to top off the day. This festival has retained its non-commercial atmosphere for over a decade, and draws nearly 10,000 people from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m. This contest is sure to add to the theme of the day - celebrating Long Island's rural, agricultural heritage.

So...if you have any photos that fit the criteria, know someone who does, or would like to try your hand at taking some, give us a call at 727-3777 for the application form and more details. The deadline for entries is August

H'S Our Garden with ELIZABETH AND CROW MILLER

A perennial in the tropics, eggplant grows as though the season will never end, branching and flowering until frost. But its vigor is fragile. Cool weather, drought, or careless potting and transplanting can all lead to disappointment. The plants for sale in six-packs at the supermarkets and garden centers, standing four-inches tall in a pinch of soil, are always root-bound. Their growth has been checked and they will grow poorly in the garden. You will see a big difference if you raise your own from organic seeds.

The seeds like warmth. When the soil is 68°F, they take about thirteen days to germinate, but when the temperature raises to 80°F, germination time drops to seven days, at 88°F the time is only five days. Eggplant is a tropical, remember, so you can imagine the warmth a seedling expects. Give the seeds a temperature between 700 and 80°F. Room temperature will not do, since evaporation cools the soil, a sunny windowsil may be fine by day but too chilly at night.

Eggplant prefers nearly neutral soil, to balance your pH use dolinite limestone, it is high in magnesium, eggplants do badly when it lacks (Mg). Though eggplant is a heavy feeder, you can give it too much nitrogen (N). It will grow vigorously but set fruit rarely. Enrich your soil with compost, which releases (N) slowly, after the plant flowers and begins to fruit, spray with a micronutrient foliar spray (fish/seaweed) every other week.

By midsummer your plants should be bushy-looking, and when conditions are right, eggplant will branch at every leaf. Even bearing half a dozen fruits, it stands erect on its woody stem, looking exotic with its gray-green six inch leaves, large flowers and dark-black, shiny fruit. Harvest begins anytime a fruit reaches half/size. Don't let the fruit mature, or it will be bitter and seeds hard. Pick before the fruit begins to lose its shine, or its color begins to pale. You can use a fruit that has begun to dull if you pick it immediately, but why not pick the young fruit. More will be coming. Use pruners to harvest, cutting the fruit stem. Don't yank off the fruit.

Eggplant has some pests. The three most common and damaging are spider mites, flea beetles and potato beetles. The red spider mite is a cousin of the tick, lives not on blood but on plant juices. It pierces the skin (Continued from page 80) of the underside of eggplant leaves, has a meal, moves to a new spot. If you suspect that your plants have spider mites, presser spray them with water, taking care to reach the underside of the leaves. The mites are knocked loose. Being so small, few of them complete the journey back.

Shiny and black, about the size of this letter 0, the flea beetle is easy to spot grazing in herds on the broad eggplant leaves. Flea beetles are agile. Try to catch one, you'll see how it got its name. Dusting with lime, rotenone, diatomaceous earth, or using SunSpray Ultra-Fine will check the flea beetles, though, once the transplants have grown larger, their leaves get tougher, less appetizing to the flea beetles.

The potato beetle prefers eggplant to potatoes. Look for pumpkin colored egg clusters under leaves. Greedy feeders, the brick-red, humpbacked larvae grow rapidly. Do a thorough job of picking them off for a week or two so that none grow to adulthood. Or there is Bacillus thuringiensis var, San Diego, B.T. This bacterium was discovered in 1985, has been widely tested against Colorado potato beetles. After eating foliage sprayed with B.T./San Diego, beetle larvae stop feeding immediately and die of starvation two to five days later.

Here's Looking At You, Kid

By Janet Berg

People may wonder if James Dolber has "Mountain Climbing" in his genes, as this 10-year old from East Moriches is beckoned from within to tackle Mt. St. Helen in the state of Washington this upcoming summer. He is tentatively contemplating the climb, as the trials and tribulations of his first climb of Mt. Marcy, the highest peak in New York State, less than one year ago, are still freshly embossed in his young memory.

Last summer, when James, probably the youngest person to ever attempt the climb that rises 5,344 feet above seal level, he had no idea what the actual experience would entail, both physically and mentally. But, after watching his 13-year-old brother Matthew travel out west to Seattle to climb both Mt. Adams (11,200 feet) and Mt. Olympus (8,565 feet), James declared that he would climb the highest peak in the State of New York.

It was named in 1837 in honor of Governor William Learned Marcy. An Indian name, "Tahawus," pronounced "Ta-Ha-wus," which means "Cloud Splitter" was also used to refer to the great peak in the sky.

His father, Lon Dolber, a mountain climber for the past ten years, had reservations about taking his nine-year old son. Suggestions of a more moderate climb in the Catskills were dismissed. After all, he had declared to his brother, his teachers, and his friends, that he would climb the "tallest" mountain in his home state

The father's concerns were put on hold; he figured, "Summer is a long way off; surely by the time he finishes school, he'll want to stay home, go to the beach, go fishing, and play with his friends. But, when summer was upon them, there was simply no talking James out of it."

James' dream becomes a reality. He is headed for 'the mountain,' with his father, his brother, Matthew, and his Uncle Gary, who sounds like a character in a Chevy Chase Vacation movie. Uncle Gary is prepared to go out into the wilderness with enough pills to make any CVS Pharmacy envious, including pills for when you can't go to the bathroom and pills for when you have to go to the bathroom too much.

The foursome ventured up the southern route of the mountain, the less frequented, more difficult path, purposely chosen by Mr. Dolber.

"My thinking was simple: after an hour or so of hiking, James would realize the mountainous task ahead of him and would want to call the whole thing off. At best, he might make it to the camping area at Flowed Lands, a hike of about five miles, spend the night, and we would all head back to the car in the morning -a great accomplishment for a nine-year-old's first hike."

But, no such luck, the foursome followed the winding "Calamity Brook," a name apropos for the journey, and two hours later the father noticed the distant look on his son's face — "the look that all first time hikers and climbers get when they realize they are in over their heads."

"One more hour, at most, and hopefully James will quit, and it is back to the car, Lake George for dinner and home to Long Island. Maybe, in a couple of years, we will come back and try it again."

After a short break, the middle-aged, role model, mountain-climbing father decides to 'increase' the pace. He thinks,"This will end my son's desire to continue."

But whenever he turned around, James just kept coming up the trail behind him. Soon they reached the four-mile mark, which brought them to the Henderson Monument, erected in memory of David Henderson, who was accidentally shot and killed - "the Calamity" on this spot.

Even though, Lon worked for many months at getting in top physical shape for this trip; to his own dismay, he was forced to announce: "We will not be having dinner in Lake George tonight; we will continue on!"

At 7 p.m. they reached the Flowed Lands camping area, set up their tent and start the stoves for dinner. The older hikers are nursing themselves; Lon's back is killing him, Uncle Gary is pampering his aching feet, and Matthew is just amused by the whole scene; while James is sitting nonchalantly by the riverside, whittling a piece of wood. He wears a look of contentment.

The next morning they head on 'to the summit,' but before they take a step, the father reiterates to James, "Our turnaround time is 2:00 p.m. I do not want to spend a night out on the trail two miles from our tents. If we are 500 feet from the summit, and it is 2 p.m., we will turn back and head down."

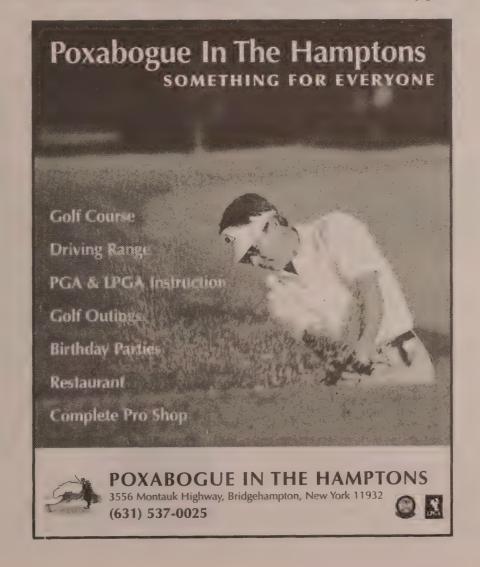

One step at a time, from one trail marker to the next, they continue up the trail, past Lake Golden Pum at 5.7 miles, onward to Avalanche Pass and Heart Lake, stopping for lunch at a ledge above a beautiful flume on the Opalescent River. It is 11:30 a.m.

Father reminds son,"Our turnaround time is 2 p.m. - no exceptions!"

At about 8.8 miles, the grade began to moderate and (Continued on next page)

finally became level just before reaching the outlet to Lake Tear of the Clouds, the highest pond source of the Hudson River, elevation 4,346 feet at 9.2 miles. Across the pond, they could see their objective, which had been hidden from view for the entire climb. Surrounded by Spruce and Balsam, the rocky dome of Mt. Marcy rises before them. It is 2 p.m.

With the encompassment of blue skies and warm air, they carried on up the rocky shoulder. They passed by two climbers, exuding perspiration, and wiping their brows. "One of them looks at my young son, nods his head, and says, "inspirational."

"Soon we are on the summit dome. All is falling away below our feet. I am climbing behind my son, so I can keep an eye on him as he inches slowly toward the top. Finally, we are standing on the top of Mt. Marcy with a view of endless wilderness and mountaintops pushing up through the clouds. James

"In a moment, I will remind him, "We have only climbed half the mountain. For now, we hold the moment

It is now 4 p.m., the sky is darkening and we are five miles from our tent. The real climb is about to begin. With each passing hour, James is losing his desire to continue. The temperature has dropped, and it started to rain.

Father and son relive their story, as they recall: "To make matters worse, we are not sure if we are on the right trail. Everything looks the same - the trees, the trail, the trail markers - everything. After what seems like an eternity, we reach the ledge by the Opalescent River where we had lunch seven hours earlier. We are still two miles from our tent.'

Under a tree sat the diminutive figure of his son: he is exhausted, wet and cold, and there are tears in his eyes. He has about given up. Feeling like the world's worst father, Lon grabs James by the shoulders and looks into his searching eyes for a long time.

He tells him, "This is the hardest thing you may ever have to do in your life, but we must go on." I knew he understood. It was a moment we will not forget.'

It is 7:30 p.m.; for another two hours they trod over the ground that has now turned into mud. Finally, they reached their tent. After getting the stoves going, and filling the boys with warm tea and lasagna, James seemed revived. He settled into a deep sleep, and not even a late night visit by a large black bear would wake

After breakfast, they soaked their feet in the Calamity Brook before they embarked on the eight-hour hike back to their car. On the ride home, James sat next to his older brother, Matthew, who had originally inspired him. There was no need for words.

He didn't know what his father is thinking: 'There comes a time when you see your parents in a different light. They are not just your parents, your providers, but human beings, who are vulnerable. From that point on, your relationship changes forever. For some it comes later than others, some sooner."

Somewhere between Lake Tear of the Clouds and the tears under a tree over the Opalescent River, a little boy and his father's relationship changed forever.

How To Be Seen In A Whole New Light

After years of research and development, skin scientists have found a way to alter the effect of light on the skin. With a combination of makeup color and skincare expertise, Photogenic SPF 15, offers an illuminating complexion and plenty of skin care benefits.

The foundation is designed to offer woman the luxury of looking great in all different lighting situations, from daylight, to office light to candlelight. "We're bringing a completely new technology to the market," stated Michelle Taylor, Senior Vice President of Marketing for Lancôme, referring to the combination of performance and treatment benefits. "Photogenic delivers a makeup result that is light-years away from traditional foundations. Imperfections seem to disappear. The effects of light are optimized and skin tones are balanced for a brighter, more even look."

There are three different characteristics that make this a unique product. The first is an innovative combination of flat and spherical powders, suspended within a liquid formula. These particles actually redirect, diffuse and soften light. They capture and diffuse just the right amount of light to subtly even out skin tones and deliver maximum luminosity, regardless of the light source-daylight, candle glow, even harsh fluorescent or incandescent lamps.

Second, the color base is different. Most traditional foundations use a grey or black pigment as a base for color. Photogenic features a blue pigment base. This borrows an awareness that great painters have known for centuries. Rembrandt, Titian and other great portrait artists added the invisible color correction of a blue base when painting flesh tones. This gives invisible color correction and brightens sallow skins for a flawless and natural-looking color finish.

Third, the product is equipped with serious skincare benefits. An energizing treatment complex of Ginseng, Ginkgo and Vitamin C to make the complexion appear healthier and energized from within. The addition of SPF 15 helps ensure a more beautiful future for your skin by protecting it from the sun's damaging rays.

It comes in seventeen shades from palest ivory to deepest ebony. The exclusive Lancôme formula provides medium-coverage with a semi-matte finish and a special fragrance-free formula developed to meet the needs of today's American woman. It is also non-comedeogenic and dermatologist-tested.

The makeup is available for approximately $32.50 in department and specialty stores, as well as online at www.lancome-usa.com.

Learned Optimism

Years ago, psychologists at Penn State University conducted experiments with dogs. The researchers would give a mild electrical shock to teach the dog to jump over a barrier to reach safety.

Some dogs learned quickly, but others never learned in spite of the shocks they received.

One of the young researchers thought the phenomenon occurred because some of the dogs developed a sense of hopelessness. His professor laughed at such silliness. So did the other graduate students.

However, through a series of experiments, this young researcher proved pessimism can be learned, and, conversely, so can optimism.

Like the dogs who refused to jump to safety, there are people who have a pessimistic view of life. They do not feel opportunities knock at their door, and, as a result, they do not feel like trying very hard.

There is a boy here at Boys Town named Billy who illustrates this point. He never knew his dad. His mom is a drug addict. When he came to Boys Town, Billy was flunking school and pretty much failing in all aspects of his life. He believed there was no sense in making an effort, because it would not make a difference anyway.

How do you teach a person like Billy hope? First, you break the problem down into little pieces.

We started with school, which Billy saw as a place of failure. He believed he was "a dumbbell who could never learn." We helped him start to see his talents by helping him learn to read. He began to learn mathematics. Soon, he began to see he could succeed in school. He now began to look forward to school because it was a place of success.

Now, we could move on to some of Billy's bigger problems. Although his mother was drug-impaired, he began to build a warm, caring relationship with his grandmother, whom he hardly know. He was amazed how his life began to change. To a degree, Billy began to see himself as captain of his own fate. He began to see it was possible for life to be good.

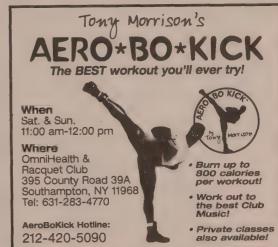

This is not a naive theory that says anything is possible. Bill Walsh, the former coach of the San Francisco 49ers, had a great prospective on this subject when he visited Boys Town a few years ago. He asked one of our kids what he wanted to be when he grew up. The boy said he wanted to play in the NFL. Walsh's response was: "Son, that's a very good goal, but if I were you, I'd have another goal in mind, too, just in case that one doesn't turn out so well."

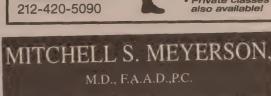

As a high school boy, I wanted very badly to earn an athletic letter. It quickly became apparent, with some good advice from a coach, my future did not lie in the NFL, nor in high school football. I still wanted to earn a letter badly. That's when I discovered golf.

That is learned optimism.—Father Val J. Peter, JCD,

A Good Night's Sleep: The Mattress Matters

If you're average, you toss and turn in bed forty to can make them more sluggish and irritable, less able sixty times a night. And that's something to lose sleep over if you sleep with a partner

That's because seventy percent of the times you move in bed, your partner moves too. All this mattress turbulence reduces Delta sleep, the most critical stage of sleep, by twenty percent. These tossing-and-turning habits create groggy mornings, irritable attitudes and unproductive days.

Many people don't make the connection that, due to their partner's movement in bed, they may be missing out on quality sleep," said Dr. James Maas, sleep expert, professor of psychology at Cornell University and author. of Power Sleep. "The lack of time spent in deep sleep to concentrate and less productive during the day and, in all, ruin their daily performance and quality of life.

In an effort to help people sleep better together, Simmons Company developed the new, non-flip Beautyrest mattress, which eliminates the trampoline effect felt by partners' kicks and turns throughout the night. By dramatically reducing rippling motion, the mattress enables couples to experience deeper, more rejuvenating, life-enhancing sleep.

In fact, in a recent study conducted in Sleepy Hollow, New York, after just two weeks of sleeping on the new Beautyrest, seventy-five real-life couples noticed dramatic improvements in the way they slept, worked and

"With this study, everyday people made the connection for themselves that when they aren't disturbed by their partners, they can sleep better," said Maas. "And a well-designed bed like the Beautyrest can actually give them a better quality of life.

So next time you feel your relationship is growing tired, instead of rushing to a marriage counselor, a mattress retailer may do the trick to keep you in a healthy sleep schedule and rejuvenated partnership. For the most recent information on sleep, log onto www.simmons.com.

Changing your mattress may help tossing-andturning partners better share the bed.-Nick Owens

POLICE BLOTTER

A Sag Harbor Village resident complained to village police of receiving annoying and creepy telephone calls. Apparently the caller said, "I'm God. I'll see you soon." The line is now being monitored.

An East Hampton woman has been receiving much less ominous but equally strange telephone calls. Apparently she had met the caller through a mutual friend, and now he continually calls her asking "if he can do anything for her."

A Southampton woman has been receiving not strange phone calls, but weird letters. The letters stated that she was being watched and that the penman wanted to meet her. The correspondence was signed, "The tall boy."

A Noyac resident called police to report that an unknown perpetrator removed the very special tape that marked off the boundaries of his tennis court. The complainant valued the tape at $300.

An Amagansett woman accused her neighbor of allegedly spreading nails across her driveway. No charges were pressed, but the police spoke with the nail-tossing neighbor.

Barbara Brogan of East Hampton called town police to report the heinous crime of mail theft. Publisher's Clearing House has apparently sent her a free can of shoe polish, but it was swiped by an unknown shoe shine. The free gift was valued at $21.

After enjoying the fine cuisine at the Crows Nest in Montauk, two female diners decided to leave only $8. Unfortunately, that did not cover the $45 meal.

Also in Montauk, this time at the Johnny Marlin restaurant, a couple ate and ran without paying any of the $30 bill. The police were given a description of the car, who found the dastardly diners and brought them back to settle up.

A short distance away at the Lakeside Inn on Edgemere Road, two youths attempted to buy cigarettes without identification. When they were denied their smokes, they decided to drive their car into the taxi stand and a planter outside of the establishment.

Somebody thought it would be fun to throw rocks at the ice cream truck parked near Kirk Park in Montauk. A shattered window resulted.

An East Hampton man was driving his brand new Chrysler Sebring on Maidstone Park Road when another rock chucker attacked. Considerable damage was caused to the Chrysler, and police have a description of the rock tosser.

A Miller Place man was standing at the urinal at Neptunes in Hampton Bays when he was rudely attacked from behind. The rest room ruckus resulted in a collapsed lung and a broken clavicle. The urinating victim was pissed off, but refused to pursue the incident.

A Volkswagen convertible while parked in East Hampton Village, was entered by an unknown person who left an unknown sticky white substance on both the front and back seats.

Dan's LETTERS

SCHOOL FOR THOUGHT

Dear Dan,

As a founding member of Hayground School, I appreciated your "The 100 Million Gift" in the June 23, issue. I am in favor of advancing the education of all our community's children. It is a great gift to touch the lives of young students. In the past five years I have discovered the level of commitment it takes to bring Hayground School to life. It has given birth to my children's education and nurtured me and Roy in ways we never could have anticipated.

I don't know Courtney Ross either, but I have observed that her interest in educating children in progressive and provocative ways is for the best.

Given that our water table will be of PRIMARY concern, I wish The Ross School and it's faculty and mentors the best of luck.

Sincerely, Brenda Siemer Scheider Parent

P.S. We can see the huge block of Rennert buildings, designed for what, I do not know, from Gibson's Lane as Molly and I take our sundown walks. Oh, boy.

GENEROUS TO A FAULT? Dear Dan,

This letter is intended as a comment on your article: "The $100 Million Gift" in June 23rd's Dan's Papers. In the article, you write of "an overall plan to spend over $100 million on the school," which you quote, "one public official" as characterizing as "the greatest offer of philanthropy ever to take place on the entire East End." Really? Let us run through the numbers.

"The faculty and administration will max around 500." Let us assume that the salary of each faculty or administration member, including benefits, averages $50,000: a nice low figure, to err on the low side. $50,000 times 500 is $25,000,000; the capital endowment required to generate that annual amount, at 5%, is $500,000,000. That's without trips to the Pyramids or China, and without construction or maintenance of the physical plant. It may be concluded that it is not endowment that Mrs. Ross has in mind, but pay-as-you-go—as long as the interest in the project persists.

What happens when this grossly under-capitalized project runs out of money? No one knows. A donation-for example to the Shinnecock Indians would offer an attractive tax deduction. Perhaps what the long-term future has in store for us is a gambling casino.

Mrs. Ross's offer reminds me of a play by Duerrenmentt, in which a woman, now wealthy, returns to the village in which she was born, and in which she was seduced as a young girl. She offers the villagers an unimaginable amount of money, on condition that they could be bought to perform such a deed, but as the play develops and the meaning of the offer sinks in, greed suggests the wisdom of a conscience-easing rationalization...

I personally can do without Mrs. Ross's generosity. If I want to enroll myself in a course of drumming, I shall think first of the Julliard School of Music.

Yours sincerely, C.G.B. Garrett East Hampton
